

Ms. Janet E. Lord

Senior Fellow, Harvard Law School Project on Disability

Senior Legal Advisor, Special Rapporteur on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

Adjunct Professor of International Law, University of Maryland Carey School of Law

Janet E. Lord has spent her career as an international human rights lawyer working globally to advance the rights of persons with disabilities. A lead drafter of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, she has shaped law reform in dozens of countries to advance disability rights, has taught and engaged in research on human rights and disability, and has provided counsel on inclusive development for the World Bank, the United Nations, the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), the Department of State of the United States and numerous other bilateral and multilateral donors.

She holds degrees from Kenyon College, the University of Edinburgh (Scotland), and the George Washington University Law School. In 2022, she was awarded an honorary doctorate of laws by Kenyon College for her work in advancing international disability rights and disability inclusive development.

She is currently serving as a senior fellow with the Harvard Law School Project on Disability and as senior legal counsel for the UN Special Rapporteur on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.