

MR. BEN SAUL

Professor of International Law, University of Sydney Law School

Dr Ben Saul is Professor of International Law and an Australian Research Council Future Fellow at The University of Sydney. Ben is internationally recognised for his work on terrorism, human rights, the law of armed conflict and international criminal law. His book, Defining Terrorism in International Law (Oxford), is the leading work on the subject. Ben has taught law at Oxford, the Hague Academy of International Law and in China, India, Nepal and Cambodia. He has advised or consulted to international organisations (such as UNHCR, UNESCO, UN human rights bodies and the ICRC), numerous governments (including Iraq, Kuwait, Algeria, Laos, Nepal and Bhutan), and NGOs (from Amnesty International to Médecins Sans Frontières). He frequently appears in the media on international law issues.

Ben also practises as a barrister in national and international courts and has been involved in human rights cases concerning South Africa, Peru, Bangladesh, Indonesia, Israel, Turkey, Tanzania, Sri Lanka, Macedonia, Fiji and the United States (including Guantanamo Bay), including before the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, UN Human Rights Committee, UN Special Tribunal for Lebanon, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, and Israeli Supreme Court. Previously Ben was Director of the Sydney Centre for International Law, Editor in Chief of the Australian International Law Journal, a member of the International Law Association's International Committee for the Reparation of Victims of War, and President of Australia's Refugee Advice and Casework Service. He has a doctorate in law from Oxford and honours degrees in Arts and Law from The University of Sydney.