INTRODUCTION

By its resolutions 39/79 and 39/88 of 13 December 1984, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare, on the basis of the outline elaborated by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization and in the light of the views expressed in the course of the discussions in the Sixth Committee and in the Special Committee, a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States.

In accordance with the conclusions reached by the Special Committee at its 1984 session with respect to the preparation of the draft handbook, the Secretary-General was instructed to consult periodically a representative group of competent individuals from among the members of the Permanent Missions of the States Members of the United Nations in order to obtain assistance in the performance of his task.¹ At the 1985 session, it was agreed that the "representative group of competent individuals from among the members of the Permanent Missions of the States Members of the United Nations" would be open to all members of the Special Committee and that the group would have purely consultative functions.²

The Secretary-General accordingly consulted the above-mentioned representative group in preparing the various chapters of the handbook. The handbook in its final form was approved by the Special Committee at its 1991 session.

The purpose of the handbook is to contribute to the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and to help to increase compliance with international law by providing States parties to a dispute, particularly those States which do not have the benefit of long-established and experienced legal departments, with the information they might need to select and apply procedures best suited to the settlement of particular disputes.

The handbook has been prepared in strict conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. It is descriptive in nature and is not a legal instrument. Although drawn up on consultation with Member States, it does not represent the views of Member States.

In conformity with the above-mentioned resolutions, the scope of the handbook was to be limited to disputes between States, excluding those disputes which although involving States fell under municipal law or were within the competence of domestic courts. However, at the request of the Consultative Group to the Secretary-General,³ the draft handbook now includes disputes to which subjects of law other than States may be parties.

The completion of this Handbook was generally recognized as a concrete and useful contribution to the United Nations Decade of International Law.

³A/AC.182/L.61, para. 6.

I. PRINCIPLE OF THE PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES BETWEEN STATES

A. Charter of the United Nations

1. The Charter of the United Nations provides in its Chapter I (Purposes and principles) that the Purposes of the United Nations are:

“To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace.” (Article 1, paragraph 1)

The Charter also provides in the same Chapter that the Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with, among others, the following principle: “All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered” (Article 2, paragraph 3). It furthermore, in Chapter VI (Pacific settlement of disputes), states that:

“The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.” (Article 33, paragraph 1)

B. Declarations and resolutions of the General Assembly

2. The principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes has been reaffirmed in a number of General Assembly resolutions, including resolutions 2627 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, 2734 (XXV) of 16 December 1970 and 40/9 of 8 November 1985. It is dealt with comprehensively in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (resolution 2625 (XXV), annex), in the section entitled “The principle that States shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered”, as well as in the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes (resolution 37/10, annex), in the Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this field (resolution 43/51, annex) and in the Declaration on Fact-finding by the United Nations in the Field of the Maintenance of International Peace and Security (resolution 46/59, annex).

C. Corollary and related principles

3. The principle of the peaceful settlement of international disputes is linked to various other principles of international law. It may be recalled in this connection that under the Declaration on Friendly Relations, the principles dealt with in the Declaration—namely, the principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations; the principle that States shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered; the principle concerning the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter; the duty of States to cooperate with one another in accordance with the Charter; the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples; the principle of sovereign equality of States; and the principle that States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter—are interrelated in their interpretation and application and each principle should be construed in the context of other principles.

4. The Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, adopted at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, states that all the principles set forth in the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States—i.e., Sovereign equality, respect for the rights inherent in sovereignty; refraining from the threat or use of force; inviolability of frontiers; territorial integrity of States; peaceful settlement of disputes; non-intervention in internal affairs; respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief; equal rights and self-determination of peoples; cooperation among States; and fulfilment in good faith of obligations under international law—“are of primary significance and, accordingly, they will be equally and unreservedly applied, each of them being interpreted taking into account the others.”

5. The links between the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes and other specific principles of international law are highlighted both in the Friendly Relations Declaration and in the Manila Declaration, as follows:

1. Principle of non-use of force in international relations

6. The interrelation between this principle and the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes is highlighted in the fourth preambular paragraph of the Manila Declaration and is also referred to in section I, paragraph 13, thereof, under which neither the existence of a dispute nor the failure of a procedure of peaceful settlement of disputes shall permit the use of force or threat of force by any of the States parties to the dispute.

7. The links between the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes and the principle of non-use of force are also highlighted in a number of other international instruments, including the 1945 Pact of the League of Arab States (art. 5), the 1948 American Treaty on Pacific Settlement (Pact of Bogotá) (art. I), the 1947 Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (arts. 1 and 2) and the last paragraph of section II of the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States contained in the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

2. Principle of non-intervention in the internal or external affairs of States

8. The interrelation between this principle and the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes is highlighted in the fifth preambular paragraph of the Manila Declaration.

9. The links between the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes and the principle of non-intervention are also highlighted in article V of the 1948 Pact of Bogotá.

3. Principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples

10. The links between this principle and the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes are highlighted in the Manila Declaration which (1) reaffirms in its eighth preambular paragraph the principle of equal rights and self-determination as enshrined in the Charter and referred to in the Friendly Relations Declaration and in other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly; (2) stresses in its ninth preambular paragraph the need for all States to desist from any forcible action which deprives peoples, particularly peoples under colonial and racist regimes or other forms of alien domination, of their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and independence; (3) refers in section I, paragraph 12, to the possibility for parties to a dispute to have recourse to the procedures mentioned in the Declaration "in order to facilitate the exercise by the peoples concerned of the right to self-determination"; and (4) declares in its penultimate paragraph that "nothing in the present Declaration could in any way prejudice the right to self-determination, freedom and independence, as derived from the Charter, of peoples forcibly deprived of that right and referred to in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, particularly peoples under colonial or racist regimes or other forms of alien domination; nor the right of these peoples to struggle to that end and to seek and receive support, in accordance with the principles of the Charter and in conformity with the above-mentioned Declaration".

4. Principle of the sovereign equality of States

11. The links between this principle and the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes are highlighted in the fifth paragraph of the relevant section of the Friendly Relations Declaration which provides that "International disputes shall be settled on the basis of the sovereign equality of States" as well as in section I, paragraph 3, of the Manila Declaration.

5. Principles of international law concerning the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of States

12. Paragraph 4 of section I of the Manila Declaration enunciates the duty of States parties to a dispute to continue to observe in their mutual relations their obligations under the fundamental principles of international law concerning the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of States.

6. Good faith in international relations

13. The Manila Declaration enunciates in its section I, paragraph 1, the duty of States to "act in good faith", with a view to avoiding disputes among themselves likely to affect friendly relations among States. Other references to good faith are to be found in paragraph 5, under which good faith and a spirit of cooperation are to guide States in their search for an early and equitable settlement of their disputes; in paragraph 11, which provides that States shall in accordance with international law implement in good faith all the provisions of agreements concluded by them for the settlement of their disputes; in paragraph 2 of section II, under which Member States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations; and in one of the concluding paragraphs of the Declaration, whereby the General Assembly urges all States to observe and promote in good faith the provisions of the Declaration in the peaceful settlement of their international disputes.

14. A provision similar to paragraph 5 of section I of the Manila Declaration is to be found in the third paragraph of section V of the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States contained in the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

7. Principles of justice and international law

15. The "principles of international law" are mentioned together with the principles of justice in Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Charter under which one of the purposes of the United Nations is "to bring about, by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace". (emphasis added) The principles of international law are also mentioned jointly with the principles of justice in section I, paragraph 3, of the Manila Declaration under which "international disputes shall be settled on the basis of the sovereign equality of States and in accordance with the principle of free choice of means in conformity with obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and with the principles of justice and international law." (emphasis added)

16. Paragraph 4 of section I of the Manila Declaration provides that "States parties to a dispute shall continue to observe in their mutual relations . . . generally recognized principles and rules of contemporary international law." (emphasis added)

17. "Justice" is referred to in Article 2, paragraph 3, of the Charter and in the first paragraph of the relevant section of the Friendly Relations Declaration, both of which provide for the settlement of international disputes "by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered.” (emphasis added)

8. Other corollary and related principles and rules

18. In its tenth preambular paragraph, the Manila Declaration singles out among “respective principles and rules concerning the peaceful settlement of international disputes”, “the exhaustion of local remedies whenever applicable”. Article VII of the 1948 Pact of Bogotá contains a similar provision.

D. Free choice of means

19. The principle of free choice of means is laid down in Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations and reiterated in the fifth paragraph of the relevant section of the Friendly Relations Declaration and in section I, paragraphs 3 and 10, of the Manila Declaration. As indicated above, both the Friendly Relations Declaration and the Manila Declaration make it clear that recourse to, or acceptance of, a settlement procedure freely agreed to with regard to existing or future disputes shall not be regarded as incompatible with the sovereign equality of States. The principle of free choice of means has also found expression in a number of other international instruments, including the Pact of Bogotá (art. III) and the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States, contained in the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (third para. of sect. V).

20. The following means are listed in Article 33 of the Charter, in the second paragraph of the relevant section of the Friendly Relations Declaration and in paragraph 5 of section I of the Manila Declaration: negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional arrangements or agencies or other peaceful means of the parties’ own choice. Among those “other peaceful means”, the Manila Declaration singles out good offices. Under the Friendly Relations Declaration (second paragraph of the relevant section) and the Manila Declaration (para. 5 of sect. I), it is for the parties to agree on such peaceful means as may be appropriate to the circumstances and the nature of their dispute.

II. MEANS OF SETTLEMENT

A. Negotiations and consultations

21. Referring to negotiation, the International Court of Justice remarked that "there is no need to insist upon the fundamental character of this method of settlement".¹ It observed in this connection,² as did its predecessor, the Permanent Court of International Justice,³ that, unlike other means of settlement, negotiation which leads to "the direct and friendly settlement of . . . disputes between parties" is universally accepted. Furthermore, negotiations are usually a prerequisite to resort to other means of peaceful settlement of disputes. This was recognized as far as arbitral or judicial proceedings were concerned by the Permanent Court in the following words: "Before a dispute can be made the subject of an action at law, its subject matter should have been clearly defined by diplomatic negotiations."^{4,5} It should be noted that the term "diplomacy" is used in some treaties, such as the 1949 Revised General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, as a synonym of "negotiations", as is also the phrase "through the usual diplomatic channels" as it appears, for instance, in the 1948 Charter of the Organization of American States.

1. Main characteristics

Negotiations

22. The Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes highlights flexibility as one of the characteristics of direct negotiations as a means of peaceful settlement of disputes (sect. I, para. 10). Negotiation is a flexible means of peaceful settlement of disputes in several respects. It can be applied to all kinds of disputes, whether political, legal or technical. Because, unlike the other means listed in Article 33 of the Charter, it involves only the States parties to the dispute, those States can monitor all the phases of the process from its initiation to its conclusion and conduct it in the way they deem most appropriate.

³In its Order of 19 April 1929 in the case of the Free Zones of Upper Savoy and the District of Gex (P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 22, p. 13).

⁴*P.C.I.J.*, Series A, No. 2, p. 15.

⁵The question of the place which negotiation occupies among other means of peaceful settlement of disputes was discussed, inter alia, in the framework of the United Nations Special Committee on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States. For a summary of the arguments advanced on this question within the Special Committee, see Official Records of the General Assembly, Twentieth Session, Annexes, agenda items 90 and 94, document A/5746, paras. 156, 158 and 161-163 and ibid., Twenty-first Session, Annexes, agenda item 87, document A/6230, paras. 195-206.

23. Another characteristic of negotiation highlighted by the Manila Declaration is effectiveness (sect. I, para. 10). Suffice it to say in this connection that in the reality of international life, negotiation, as one of the means of peaceful settlement of disputes, is most often resorted to by States for solving contentious issues and that, while it is not always successful, it does solve the majority of disputes.

Consultations

24. Consultations may be considered as a variety of negotiations. While they are not mentioned in Article 33 of the Charter, they are provided for in a growing number of treaties as a means of settling disputes arising from the interpretation or application of the treaty concerned. Mention may be made in this connection of article 84 of the 1975 Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, which provides for the holding of consultations at the request of any of the parties, as well as of article 41 of the 1978 Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties and article 42 of the 1983 Convention on the Succession of State Property, Archives and Debts, both of which provide for "a process of consultation and negotiation".

25. In other treaties, consultations are provided for as a preliminary phase in the process of settlement of disputes. Reference is made in this connection to article XI of the 1959 Antarctic Treaty, article 17 of the 1979 Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and article XXV of the 1980 Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources, which provide, in case of disputes, that the States parties shall consult among themselves with a view to the settlement of the dispute by peaceful means.

Exchanges of views

26. Exchanges of views may also be considered as a form of consultations. They play an important role in the system established by the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea for the peaceful settlement of disputes arising from the interpretation and application of the Convention. Reference is made in this connection to article 283 of the Convention, which reads as follows:

"1. When a dispute arises between States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention, the parties to the dispute shall proceed expeditiously to an exchange of views regarding its settlement by negotiation or other peaceful means.

"2. The parties shall also proceed expeditiously to an exchange of views where a procedure for the settlement of such a dispute has been terminated without a settlement or where a settlement has been reached and the circumstances require consultation regarding the manner of implementing the settlement."

2. Initial phase

27. Normally, the negotiating process starts as the result of one State perceiving the existence of a dispute and inviting another State to enter into negotiations for its settlement. The start of the negotiating process is conditional upon the acceptance by the other State of such an invitation. It may occur that a State invited to enter into negotiations has valid reasons to believe that there is no dispute to negotiate and that there is, therefore, no basis for the opening of negotiations. It may also occur that a State, while agreeing to enter into negotiations, subjects the opening of negotiations to conditions unacceptable to the first State. The discretion of States with respect to the initiation of the negotiating process is, however, subject to certain limitations.

28. A number of treaties place on the States Parties thereto an obligation to carry out “negotiations”, “consultations”, or “exchanges of views” whenever a controversy arises in connection with the treaty concerned. Examples of such treaties are the 1979 Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (General Assembly resolution 34/68, annex, art. 15, para. 1), the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character (art. 84), the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (art. 283, para. 1) and the 1959 Antarctic Treaty (art. VIII, para. 2). Under some of those treaties, parties to a dispute arising from the interpretation or application of the treaty are under an obligation to start the consultation or negotiation process without delay (see art. 283, para. 1, of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea; art. 15, para. 2, of the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies; and art. VIII, para. 2, of the Antarctic Treaty).

29. Furthermore, many treaties providing for peaceful settlement procedures make resort to the third party means of settlement envisaged in the treaty conditional upon failure of negotiations. This approach is to be found in some treaties specifically concluded for the settlement of all disputes which may arise among the States parties thereto, such as for example, the 1949 Revised General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes (art. I).

30. This approach is also to be found in the dispute settlement clause of many multilateral treaties, such as article 4 of the 1948 Convention on the International Maritime Organization, and article VIII of the 1969 International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties.

31. It should furthermore be pointed out that the setting in motion of the negotiating process can be encouraged by international organizations. Aside from the fact that such organizations provide a meeting place where representatives of States parties to a dispute can get together and conduct formal or informal discussions with a view to settling the dispute, organs of an international organization may contribute to the opening of negotiations by addressing to the parties recommendations to that effect.

32. In the case of the United Nations, the General Assembly may, as is recalled in section II, paragraph 3 (a), of the Manila Declaration, “discuss any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations and, subject to Article 12 of the Charter, recommend measures for its peaceful settlement". The means of settlement which the General Assembly has most frequently recommended to the parties to a dispute is negotiation. Reference is made in this respect to resolution 40/9 of 8 November 1985, in which the Assembly addressed a solemn appeal to States in conflict to proceed to the settlement of their disputes by negotiations and other peaceful means.

33. In addressing such recommendations to the parties, the General Assembly has often asked them to take account in their negotiations of specific elements such as the purposes and principles of the Charter; the objectives of resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 (Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples); the interests of the people concerned; the right to self-determination and independence; and the principle of national unity and territorial integrity.

34. In accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations in the area of peaceful settlement of disputes or of any situation the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, the Security Council has on a number of occasions adopted resolutions calling upon States to enter into negotiations.

35. The furtherance of negotiations between the parties to a dispute is but a limited aspect of the role which the United Nations and other international organizations play in the peaceful settlement of disputes. This role is dealt with comprehensively in chapter III of the present handbook, as far as the United Nations is concerned, and in chapter IV, as regards other international organizations.

36. It should finally be noted that the parties may be directed to negotiate by a judicial decision binding upon them. Reference is made in this connection to the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases, in which the International Court of Justice stated the following:

"75. The obligation to negotiate thus flows from the very nature of the respective rights of the Parties; to direct them to negotiate is therefore a proper exercise of the judicial function in this case. This also corresponds to the Principles and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations concerning peaceful settlement of disputes. As the Court stated in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases:

'... this obligation merely constitutes a special application of a principle which underlies all international relations, and which is moreover recognized in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations as one of the methods for the peaceful settlement of international disputes' " (I.C.J. Reports 1969, p. 47, para. 86).⁶

⁶*I.C.J. Reports 1974*, p. 32.

3. Conduct of the negotiating process

(a) Framework of the negotiating process

(i) Bilateral negotiations

37. Bilateral negotiations are traditionally conducted directly between duly appointed representatives or delegations or through written correspondence and have been greatly facilitated in modern times by the development of telecommunications and means of transportation. While the negotiators are often ministers of foreign affairs—or officials of the foreign ministries—of the parties, practice offers many instances of disputes settled by specialized negotiators. There are instances where Heads of State or Government are involved either at the initial stage of the negotiations—with the process being subsequently conducted at a lower level—or, conversely, at the concluding stage, after negotiations have been concluded at the expert level. The question of the respective ranks of the negotiators may be relevant to the extent that one side insists that the other side should be represented at the same level.

38. There are many examples of bilateral negotiations conducted in the framework of diplomatic joint commissions, particularly for the settlement of territorial or waterway disputes. It should be noted that disputes relating to international waterways are often dealt with in the framework of standing joint commissions established by treaties.⁷

39. Permanent diplomatic missions often play an important role in presenting the position of their respective Governments in negotiations with the foreign ministry of the State to which they are accredited. Furthermore, States parties to a dispute which do not maintain diplomatic relations may find it convenient to carry on negotiations for the settlement of the dispute through their respective diplomatic missions to a third country or their permanent missions to the United Nations. The eventuality of absence of diplomatic relations between States parties to a dispute is envisaged in article 15 of the 1979 Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, paragraph 3 of which reads in part:

“A State Party which does not maintain diplomatic relations with another State Party concerned shall participate in such consultations, at its choice, either itself or through another State Party or the Secretary-General as intermediary.”

40. Individuals having no governmental position such as former ministers, university rectors, etc., may, in certain cases, be entrusted with the conduct of bilateral negotiations or with laying the ground for negotiations proper.

(ii) Plurilateral or multilateral negotiations

41. When several States are parties to a dispute, an international conference may provide the framework for the negotiating process. There are examples of conferences convened at the invitation of one of the parties and in which one or several of the other parties refrained from taking part. States having an interest in the settlement of a dispute but not parties to it may hold a conference without the participation of the parties to study the dispute and make proposals for its settlement. In the absence of one or several of the parties, no negotiation is possible but such conferences may, if their recommendations commend themselves to the parties, bring to the settlement of the dispute a contribution akin to good offices or mediation.

(iii) “Collective negotiations”

42. The framework of the negotiating process can also be an international organization. Reference is made in this connection to the judgment of the International Court of Justice in the South West Africa cases (Preliminary Objections) in which the Court stated the following in response to the contention, by the respondent, that collective negotiations in the United Nations were one thing and direct negotiations between it and the appellants were another:

“ . . . diplomacy by conference or parliamentary diplomacy has come to be recognized in the past four or five decades as one of the established modes of international negotiation. In cases where the disputed questions are of common interest to a group of States on one side or the other in an organized body, parliamentary or conference diplomacy has often been found to be the most practical form of negotiation. The number of parties to one side or the other of a dispute is of no importance; it depends upon the nature of the question at issue. If it is one of mutual interest to many States, whether in an organized body or not, there is no reason why each of them should go through the formality and pretence of direct negotiations with the common adversary State after they have already fully participated in collective negotiations with the same State in opposition.”⁸

43. Examples of “organized bodies” in the framework of which such “collective negotiations” can be carried out for the peaceful settlement of disputes will be found in chapters III and IV below.

(b) Place of negotiations

44. Bilateral or plurilateral negotiations usually take place in the capital city of one of the parties. They may also be held alternately in each of the capitals. In the case of neighbouring States, a locality close to the common border may be selected.

⁸*I.C.J. Reports 1962*, p. 346.

45. A city, or a series of cities, outside the respective territories of the parties may provide the forum for negotiations, particularly if there are no diplomatic relations between the parties or if, as a result of the dispute, there is a state of tension between them.

46. While collective negotiations within an international organization usually take place at the seat of the organization, a specific organ having competence in the area of peaceful settlement of disputes may choose to meet at a venue away from the seat of the organization. Reference is made in this connection to Article 28, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations which reads as follows: "The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgement will best facilitate its work."

(c) Degree of publicity of the proceedings

47. In the case of bilateral negotiations it is for the parties to determine jointly the degree of publicity they wish to give to their negotiations. They may opt for confidentiality, at least in the initial phase.

48. On occasion, as has been seen above, bilateral negotiations have been encouraged by international organizations. They may in such cases receive a certain degree of publicity. The General Assembly, for example, has sometimes recorded the fact that negotiations were taking place between the two parties concerned, further to an invitation which it had addressed to them to that effect. It has also, in more frequent cases, coupled its invitation to the parties to negotiate with an invitation to report to it on the course of the negotiations. There is an instance where a similar invitation contained in a General Assembly resolution resulted in the issuance by the two parties of a joint statement in the form of an exchange of notes recording the conclusions of the negotiating delegations as to measures to be adopted on the understanding that they might contribute to the process of a definitive solution to the dispute between the two Governments.

49. Negotiations within an organ of an international organization are, at least partly, carried on in public and recorded in official documents. But a growing amount of such "collective negotiations" is conducted privately and informally.

(d) Duration of the negotiation process

50. The time-frame for the negotiation process varies according to the circumstances. The process may be concluded in a few days or may extend over several decades. Practice offers many examples of intermittently conducted negotiations.

51. Under certain treaties a time-limit is set for the completion of the negotiation process, beyond which resort may be had to another means of peaceful settlement. Thus, article 14 of the 1981 Treaty establishing the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States reads in part as follows:

"1. Any dispute that may arise between two or more of the Member States regarding the interpretation and application of this Treaty shall, upon the request of any of them, be amicably resolved by direct agreement.

“2. If the dispute is not resolved within three months of the date on which the request referred to in the preceding paragraph has been made, any party to the dispute may submit it to the conciliation procedure provided for in Annex A . . .” (emphasis added).

Articles 84 and 85, paragraph 1, of the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character read in part as follows:

“Article 84

“Consultations

“If a dispute between two or more States Parties arises out of the application or interpretation of the present Convention, consultations between them shall be held upon the request of any of them . . .”

“Conciliation

“1. If the dispute is not disposed of as a result of the consultations referred to in article 84 within one month from the date of their inception, any State participating in the consultations may bring the dispute before a conciliation commission . . .” (emphasis added)

Articles 41 and 42 of the 1978 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in respect of Treaties read as follows:

“Article 41. Consultation and negotiation

“If a dispute regarding the interpretation or application of the present Convention arises between two or more Parties to the Convention, they shall, upon the request of any of them, seek to resolve it by a process of consultation and negotiation.

“Article 42. Conciliation

“If the dispute is not resolved within six months of the date on which the request referred to in article 41 has been made, any party to the dispute may submit it to the conciliation procedure specified in the Annex to the present Convention . . .” (emphasis added)

Article 16, paragraph 1 of the 1965 Convention on the Transit Trade of Land-locked States reads in part as follows:

“1. Any dispute which may arise with respect to the interpretation or application of the provisions of this Convention which is not settled by negotiation or by other peaceful means of settlement within a period of nine months shall, at the request of either party, be settled by arbitration.” (emphasis added)

(e) Attitude of the parties

52. Under some treaties, States are under an explicit obligation to take a positive attitude in conducting consultations aimed at settling disputes arising from the interpretation or application of the treaty. Thus under article XXII of the 1947 General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade:

“Each contracting party shall accord sympathetic consideration to, and shall afford adequate opportunity for consultation regarding, such representations as may be made by any other contracting party with respect to all matters affecting the operation of this Agreement.”

Article 57 of the 1983 International Coffee Agreement contains a similar provision.

53. Mention should further be made in this context of the treaty provisions referred to in paragraph 51 above, which place on parties an obligation of diligence in the initiation and conduct of the negotiation or consultation process.

54. The concerns reflected in the two preceding paragraphs have also found expression in the Manila Declaration, which provides in its section 1, paragraph 10, that when States choose to resort to direct negotiations, they should “negotiate meaningfully, in order to arrive at an early settlement acceptable to the parties”. This provision reiterates in the specific context of negotiation the general idea enunciated in section I, paragraph 5, of the Declaration, under which “States shall seek in good faith and in a spirit of cooperation an early and equitable settlement of their international disputes by the following means . . .”

55. Resolutions of organs of international organizations calling upon States parties to a dispute to enter into negotiations have, on occasion, stressed the need for a positive attitude on the part of all concerned. Thus, in one resolution the General Assembly expressed confidence in the good faith and willingness of the two Governments to pursue vigorously direct negotiations for an early delineation of the frontier. The Security Council in one resolution requested the Secretary-General to enter into immediate consultations with the parties concerned and interested and appealed to them to exercise restraint and moderation and to enable the mission of the Secretary-General to be undertaken in satisfactory conditions. In another resolution, the Security Council regretted a unilateral decision as, inter alia, tending to compromise the continuation of negotiations and called upon all the parties concerned to refrain from any action which might jeopardize the negotiations, and to take steps which would facilitate the creation of the climate necessary for the success of those negotiations. In other resolutions, the Council urged that negotiations be resumed as soon as possible meaningfully and constructively, on the basis of comprehensive and concrete proposals, and that talks be pursued in a continuing, sustained and result-oriented manner, avoiding any delay.

56. Also relevant in this context is the following extract from the judgment of ICJ in the South West Africa Cases (Preliminary Objections):

“ . . . it is not so much the form of negotiation that matters as the attitude and views of the Parties on the substantive issues of the question involved. So long as both sides remain adamant . . . there is no reason to think that the dispute can be settled by further negotiations between the Parties.”⁹

57. Similarly, the Court in its judgment in the North Sea Continental Shelf case stated:

“The Parties are under an obligation to enter into negotiations with a view to arriving at an agreement, and not merely to go through a formal process of negotiation of a sort of prior condition for the automatic application of a certain method of delimitation in the absence of agreement; they are under an obligation so to conduct themselves that the negotiations are meaningful, which will not be the case when either of them insists upon its own position without contemplating any modification of it”.¹⁰ (emphasis added)

58. Mention should also be made in this context of the judgment of the Court in the Fisheries Jurisdiction case,¹¹ in which the Court directed the parties “to conduct their negotiations on the basis that each must in good faith pay reasonable regard to the legal rights of the other”, and of the award of 16 November 1957 in the Lake Lanoux case, in which the arbitral tribunal mentions as examples of “infringement of the rules of good faith” in the conduct of negotiations, “unjustified breaking off of conversations, unusual delays, disregard of established procedures, systematic refusal to give consideration to proposals or adverse interests”.¹²

(f) *Steps aimed at facilitating the negotiating process through the involvement of a third party*¹³

59. The dividing line between, on the one hand, steps aimed at facilitating the negotiating process through third party involvement and, on the other hand, mediation or good offices may be difficult to draw. However, since such steps are intrinsically linked to the negotiating process itself, it is appropriate to deal with them briefly in the context of the present section of the handbook.

60. Some treaties contain certain provisions aimed at facilitating the opening of consultations or the conduct of the process. Thus, under article 15, paragraph 3, of the 1979 Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies:

“If difficulties arise in connection with the opening of consultations or if consultations do not lead to a mutually acceptable settlement, any State Party may seek the assistance of the Secretary-General without seeking the consent of any other State Party concerned, in order to resolve the controversy.”

⁹*I.C.J. Reports* 1962, p. 346.

¹⁰*I.C.J. Reports* 1969, p. 47, para. 85 (a).

¹¹*I.C.J. Reports* 1974, p. 33, para. 78.

¹²See Yearbook of the International Law Commission, 1974, vol. II (Part Two) (United Nations publication, Sales No. E.75.V.7 (Part II)), document A/5409, para. 1065.

¹³Steps aimed at facilitating the negotiating process may be taken jointly by the parties without any third party being involved. One such step is the establishment of standing joint commissions with negotiating powers, which is dealt with under subsection 3 (a) above.

The 1983 International Coffee Agreement provides in its article 57 that in the course of the consultation process, on request by either party and with the consent of the other, an independent panel shall be established which shall use its good offices with a view to conciliating the parties.

61. Within international organizations, a decision or a recommendation of a competent organ that parties to a dispute should undertake negotiations with a view to the settlement of their dispute may seek to facilitate the negotiating process by various means.

62. Within the United Nations, the General Assembly has, in one instance, recommended that the negotiating process be assisted, on the request of either party, by a third party to be selected by the parties or, failing their agreement, to be appointed by the Secretary-General. In another instance, the Assembly suggested that the parties concerned should designate a Government agency or person to facilitate contacts between them and assist them in settling the dispute and further decided that if, within six months, the parties had not reached agreement on the designation of such a Government agency or person, the Secretary-General would designate a person for this purpose.¹⁴ In still another case, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to undertake a mission of good offices in order to assist the parties to resume negotiations in order to find as soon as possible a peaceful solution of their dispute.

63. The Security Council has also, in some of the cases where it called upon States to carry on negotiations, sought to facilitate the negotiation process by placing the services of a third party at the disposal of the parties. Thus, in one instance, the Council called upon the parties to seek such agreement forthwith by negotiations conducted either directly or through a Mediator. In another case, it urged the Governments concerned to enter into immediate negotiations under the auspices of a United Nations representative. In still another case, it invited the Secretary-General to lend whatever assistance might be requested by both countries in connection with, inter alia, an early resumption of conversations with a view to a comprehensive settlement of all bilateral issues. On yet another occasion the Council requested the Secretary-General to enter into immediate consultations with the parties concerned and interested. In a further case the Council, considering that new efforts should be undertaken to assist the resumption of negotiations, requested the Secretary-General to undertake a new mission of good offices and to that end to place himself personally at their disposal, so that the resumption, the intensification and the progress of comprehensive negotiations, carried out in a reciprocal spirit of understanding and of moderation under his personal auspices and with his direction as appropriate, might thereby be facilitated.

64. The steps which the organs of the United Nations or other international organizations may take with a view to facilitating the negotiating process are dealt with in detail in the relevant sections of the present chapter (in particular those relating to mediation and good offices) and are recapitulated, as far as the United Nations is concerned, in chapter III and, as regards other international organizations, in chapter IV.

(g) Question whether the existence of an ongoing negotiation process precludes resort to another peaceful settlement procedure

65. This question has been dealt with, as far as judicial settlement is concerned, by the International Court of Justice in a case which involved the alleged violation by one of the parties to the dispute of its international legal obligations to the other party as provided by, inter alia, the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations.¹⁵ As has been seen above, disputes arising from the interpretation or application of this Convention lie, under the relevant Optional Protocol to the Convention, within the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. Both parties to the dispute had acceded to the Protocol and were therefore bound by it. The Court examined the question whether efforts aimed at easing the situation of crisis existing between the two countries, which had been undertaken by the Secretary-General at the request of the Security Council, could be considered as incompatible with the continuance of parallel proceedings before the Court. The Court came to a negative conclusion and further stated the following:

“Negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration and judicial settlement are enumerated together in Article 33 of the Charter as means for the peaceful settlement of disputes. As was pointed out in the Aegean Sea Continental Shelf case,¹⁶ the jurisprudence of the Court provides various examples of cases in which negotiations and recourse to judicial settlement by the Court have been pursued pari passu.”¹⁷

66. In another case, the International Court of Justice has stated:

¹⁵*United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1980*, p. 3.

¹⁶In this case, the Court declared itself unable to share the view that it ought not to proceed with the case while the parties continued to negotiate and that the existence of active negotiations in progress constituted an impediment to the Court's exercise of jurisdiction. The Court further stated:

“Negotiation and judicial settlement are enumerated together with Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations as means for the peaceful settlement of disputes. The jurisprudence of the Court provides various examples of cases in which negotiations and recourse to judicial settlement have been pursued pari passu. Several cases, the most recent one being that concerning the Trial of Pakistani Prisoners of War (I.C.J. Reports 1973, p. 347), show that judicial proceedings may be discontinued when such negotiations result in the settlement of the dispute. Consequently, the fact that negotiations are being actively pursued during the present proceedings is not, legally, any obstacle to the exercise by the Court of its judicial function.” I.C.J. Reports 1978, p. 12, para. 29.

¹⁷*I.C.J. Reports 1980*, p. 24, para. 43.

“ . . . the Court considers that even the existence of active negotiations in which both parties might be involved should not prevent both the Security Council and the Court from exercising their separate functions under the Charter and the Statute of the Court.”¹⁸

67. In connection with the reference to the Security Council in the above statement of the Court, it should be recalled that the Council is empowered, under Article 36 of the Charter of the United Nations, to recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment “at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature”, i.e., any dispute or situation the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. Under paragraph 2 of the same provision, however, “the Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties”. In the latter connection, reference is made to a resolution of the Security Council in which the Council specified that it was acting without prejudice to negotiations that the parties concerned and interested might undertake under Article 33 of the Charter.

4. Outcome of the negotiations and possible subsequent steps

68. When negotiations are successful, they normally lead to the issuance by the parties of an instrument reflecting the terms of the agreement arrived at. This document may be a comprehensive agreement. It may be a joint statement or communiqué. A memorandum or declaration defining broad points of agreement may precede the issuance of a more detailed agreement.

69. If the negotiations are unsuccessful, the parties may choose to adjourn the negotiation process sine die or to issue a communiqué recording the failure of the negotiations. If the dispute relates to the interpretation or application of a treaty, the failure of the negotiations may result in denunciation of the treaty by one of the parties.

70. As has been seen above, the dispute settlement clauses of many multilateral treaties provide that disputes which cannot be settled by negotiation shall be submitted to another peaceful settlement procedure. Various patterns of successive steps can be found in practice, as further discussed in detail in the handbook, including the following:

(a) Consultation; conciliation (arts. 84 and 85 of the 1975 Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character);

(b) Consultation; other peaceful means of the parties' choice (art. 15 of the 1979 Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies);

¹⁸*Military and Paramilitary Activities in and Against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States)*, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 440, para. 106.

(c) Negotiation; other peaceful means of the parties' choice; conciliation; arbitration (art. VIII of the 1969 International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties);

(d) Exchanges of views; peaceful means of the parties' choice; conciliation; judicial or arbitral settlement (arts. 280, 283, 284, 286 and 287 of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. Under article 287 of the Convention, a State is free to choose, by means of a written declaration, one or more of four compulsory procedures entailing binding decisions);

(e) Negotiation; procedures provided by the treaty; resort to ICJ (art. 22 of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination);

(f) Consultation and negotiation; conciliation; arbitration or resort to ICJ (arts. 41, 42 and 43 of the 1978 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties and arts. 42, 43 and 44 of the 1983 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in respect of State property, archives and debts);

(g) Consultation; negotiation; resort to an organ of an international organization (art. 58 of the 1983 International Coffee Agreement);

(h) Negotiation; arbitration, failing agreement on another form of settlement (art. 10 of the 1973 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships and Protocol II to the Convention and art. 16 of the 1965 Convention on the Transit Trade of Land-locked States);

(i) Negotiation; arbitration; resort to ICJ (art. 24 of the 1963 Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed On Board Aircraft; art. 29 of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women; art. 30 of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment; art. 13 of the 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents; art. 16 of the 1979 International Convention against the Taking of Hostages; art. 12 of the 1970 Hague Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft; and art. 14 of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation);

(j) Negotiation; procedures provided by the treaty; resort to ICJ (arts. 28 to 44 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights);

(k) Negotiation; resort to ICJ, failing agreement on another form of settlement (art. XV of the 1971 Universal Copyright Convention; art. 8 of the 1962 Convention on Consent to Marriage, Minimum Age for Marriage, and Registration of Marriages; art. XII of the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid; art. I of the 1957 Convention on the Nationality of Married Women; art. V of the 1953 Convention on the International Right of Correction; art. 10 of the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery; art. IX of the 1953 Convention on the Political Rights of Women; sect. 30 of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations; sect. 32 of the 1947 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies; and art. 34 of the 1959 Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Atomic Energy Agency).

71. Underlying these clauses is the general principle reflected in section I, paragraph 7, of the Manila Declaration, which reads in part as follows:

“In the event of failure of the parties to a dispute to reach an early solution by any of the above means of settlement, they shall continue to seek a peaceful solution and shall consult forthwith on mutually agreed means to settle the dispute peacefully.”

72. The same principle underlies several resolutions of the General Assembly which envisage possible alternative courses of action in case negotiations do not lead to the settlement of the dispute. Thus, in one instance, the General Assembly has recommended a three-step procedure: namely, negotiations, followed by resort, in order to resolve differences arising in the course of negotiations, to a procedure of mediation by a United Nations mediator to be appointed by the Secretary-General and, finally, resort to arbitration in the event of the inability of the parties to accept the recommendations of the mediator. In another instance, the Assembly has recommended that, in the event that negotiations do not lead to satisfactory results within a reasonable period of time, both parties should give favourable consideration to the possibility of seeking a solution of their differences by any of the means provided in the Charter, including recourse to ICJ or any other peaceful means of their own choice.

73. The concept of failure of negotiations has been touched upon both by the Permanent Court of International Justice and by the International Court of Justice. In its judgment in the Mavrommatis case, the Permanent Court stated:

“... the question of the importance and chances of success of diplomatic negotiations is essentially a relative one. Negotiations do not of necessity always presuppose a more or less lengthy series of notes and dispatches; it may suffice that a discussion should have been commenced, and this discussion may have been very short; this will be the case if a deadlock is reached, or if finally a point is reached at which one of the Parties definitely declares himself unable, or refuses, to give way, and there can therefore be no doubt that the dispute cannot be settled by diplomatic negotiation.”¹⁹

In its judgment in the South West Africa Cases (Preliminary Objections), the International Court of Justice dealt with the matter in the following words:

“Now in the present cases, it is evident that a deadlock on the issues of the dispute was reached and has remained since, and that no modification of the respective contentions has taken place since the discussions and negotiations in the United Nations. It is equally evident that ‘there can be no doubt’, in the words of the Permanent Court, ‘that the dispute cannot be settled by diplomatic negotiation', and that it would be 'superfluous' to undertake renewed discussions.

"... So long as both sides remain adamant, and this is obvious even from their oral presentations before the Court, there is no reason to think that the dispute can be settled by further negotiations between the Parties."²⁰

B. Inquiry

1. Functions and relation to other peaceful means under the Charter of the United Nations

74. In an international dispute involving in particular a difference of opinion on points of fact, the States concerned may agree to initiate an inquiry to investigate a disputed issue of fact, as well as other aspects of the dispute, to determine any violations of relevant treaties or other international commitments alleged by the parties and to suggest appropriate remedies and adjustments. Inquiry may also be resorted to when parties to a dispute agree on some other means of settlement (arbitration, conciliation, regional arrangements, etc.) and there arises a need for collecting all necessary information in order to ascertain or elucidate the facts giving rise to the dispute.

75. The function of inquiry—investigation or elucidation of a disputed issue of fact—was comprehensively dealt with in the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions²¹ for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes. Article 9 of the 1907 Convention reads as follows:

"In disputes of an international nature involving neither honour nor essential interests, and arising from a difference of opinion on points of fact, the Contracting Powers deem it expedient and desirable that the parties who have not been able to come to an agreement by means of diplomacy should, as far as circumstances allow, institute an international commission of inquiry, to facilitate a solution of these disputes by elucidating the facts by means of an impartial and conscientious investigation."

76. Inquiry as a means of settlement of disputes has been provided for in a number of bilateral and multilateral treaties, including the Covenant of the League of Nations, the Charter of the United Nations and the constituent instruments of certain specialized agencies and other international organizations within the United Nations system, and in various instruments by the regional bodies.

77. Inquiry, as an impartial third-party procedure for fact-finding and investigation, may indeed contribute to a reduction of tension and the prevention of an international dispute, as distinct from facilitating the settlement of such a dispute. The possibility of fact-finding (inquiry) contributing to the prevention of an international dispute was recognized, for example, by the General Assembly in its resolution 1967 (XVIII) of 16 December 1963 on the "Question of methods of fact-finding."²² In the resolution, the Assembly stated its belief "that an important contribution to the peaceful settlement of disputes and to the prevention of such disputes could be made by providing for impartial fact-finding within the framework of international organizations and in bilateral and multinational conventions".

78. On 18 December 1967, the General Assembly adopted resolution 2329 (XXII), in which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a register of experts in legal and other fields, whose services the States parties to a dispute might, by agreement, use for fact-finding in relation to a dispute. It also requested Member States to nominate up to five of their nationals to be included in such a register.²³ As mentioned in paragraph 144 of the first report of the Secretary-General (A/5094), the role of such fact-finding bodies "as a stabilizing factor in themselves, in situations potentially endangering the maintenance of international peace and security, should not be overlooked, nor the part which they have on occasions played in providing a means of liaison and communication between conflicting parties".

79. To a great extent the task of such fact-finding bodies established in accordance with the above-mentioned resolution "in relation to a dispute" may be regarded as seeking the prevention of a dispute or the prevention of the aggravation of a dispute and the adjustment of situations the continuance of which is likely to give rise to a dispute.

80. Recognition that fuller use and further improvement of the means for fact-finding of the United Nations could contribute to the strengthening of the role of the Organization in the maintenance of international peace and security and promote the peaceful settlement of disputes as well as the prevention and removal of threats to the peace has developed slowly together with a new willingness on the part of Member States to enhance the role of the United Nations. The 1988 Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field called for full use of the fact-finding capabilities of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General in strengthening further the role and effectiveness of the United Nations in maintaining international peace and security for all States. The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization had developed further on ²²Under this item, the Secretary-General of the United Nations prepared two studies, the first dated 1 May 1964, and the second, 22 April 1966 (see, respectively, Official Records of the General Assembly, Twentieth Session, Annexes, vol. III, agenda items 90 and 94, document A/5694, and ibid., Twenty-first Session, Annexes, vol. III, agenda item 87, document A/6228. These studies describe the practice of States and some international organizations, principally the League of Nations and the United Nations, specialized agencies and other international organizations of universal or regional character, indicating the evolution of the procedure.

²³The Secretary-General issued the Register on 24 September 1968 (document A/7240); subsequent revisions appeared on 7 November 1969 (A/7751) and on 18 November 1970 (A/8108). The Register contained 189 nominations received from 42 Member States. There have been no further changes in the Register since that time.

fact-finding by the United Nations. The Committee elaborated a Declaration on Fact-finding by the United Nations in the Field of the Maintenance of International Peace and Security, which was adopted by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.²⁴ The Declaration aims at enhancing the use of and improving the fact-finding means available to the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General in the fulfilment of their functions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security.

81. From the evidence in the above-mentioned treaties and other international instruments, it may be observed that the terms “inquiry” (“enquiry”), “fact-finding” and “investigation” have all been used (sometimes interchangeably) for this type of procedure under which parties to an international dispute may call for the establishment of an international commission of inquiry,²⁵ an international fact-finding commission,²⁶ or an international investigation commission,²⁷ with varying degrees of competence. The competence conferred upon a commission of inquiry may vary depending on the subject-matter of the inquiry and also whether the machinery is instituted to serve the interest of States directly, as illustrated by a number of cases,²⁸ both prior to and since the Hague Conventions. It may also depend on whether an inquiry is set in motion to assist an international organization, such as the United Nations, to fulfil its various obligations under the Charter in the area of the maintenance of international peace and security²⁹ or whether an inquiry commission is instituted by any of the specialized agencies and the ²⁹By its resolution 496 (1981) of 15 December 1981, the Security Council decided to send a commission of inquiry composed of three of its members in order to investigate the origin, background and financing of the mercenary aggression of 25 November 1981 against the Republic of Seychelles, as well as assess and evaluate economic damages, and to report to the Council with recommendations; and by its resolution 598 (1987) of 20 July 1987 requested the Secretary-General “to explore, in consultation with Iran and Iraq”, the question of entrusting an impartial body with inquiring into responsibility for the conflict and to report to the Security Council as soon as possible. In one recent instance, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to carry out promptly investigations in response to reports that might be brought to his attention by any Member State concerning the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons in order to ascertain the facts of the matter and to report promptly the result of any such investigation to all Member States (resolution 44/115 B of 15 December 1989).

International Atomic Energy Agency to deal with an issue under their respective constitutions and statutes.³⁰

82. By virtue of its mandate to investigate the facts and to clarify the questions in dispute under the functions outlined above, inquiry may thus involve the hearing of the parties, the examination of witnesses or visits on the spot.³¹ Although inquiry may thus employ the techniques of gathering evidence which are normally used in the arbitral or judicial process, this does not change its basic status and functions as outlined above. But it does underscore the fact that inquiry is thus capable of combining the benefits of diplomacy and legal techniques to obtain for the parties an impartial report on the issues in dispute, or of suggesting a solution of the problem. Because of this possibility of being given the mandate of recommending a solution, a commission of inquiry may thus tend to acquire a status which sometimes makes it difficult to distinguish its function from that of conciliation. This has resulted in the establishment of a machinery designated as a panel for inquiry and conciliation in the context of the United Nations.³²

2. Initiation and methods of work

83. Inquiry may be set in motion by mutual consent of the States concerned on an ad hoc basis, relying upon a treaty in force between them, creating a general obligation to settle disputes by peaceful means. It may also be initiated in accordance with the terms of an applicable treaty, specifically establishing inquiry as the mode of handling a category of disputes and indicating how the process may be initiated, including its method of work.³³

84. Some treaties have thus provided for the establishment of a permanent commission of inquiry, fact-finding or investigation, whose jurisdiction is to be accepted in advance by the States parties to the treaty in question.³⁴ The jurisdiction of such institutionalized commission of inquiry either may be invoked without further agreement between States parties to a dispute, or ³⁰In the incidents of the shooting down of civilian aircraft the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), by its resolution of 16 September 1983 in one case, directed the Secretary-General of ICAO "to institute an investigation to determine the facts and technical aspects relating to the flight and destruction of the aircraft". Similarly, in another case, in the statement by the President of the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization, approved by the Council on 14 July 1988, the Council directed the Secretary-General of ICAO "to institute an immediate fact-finding investigation to determine all relevant facts and technical aspects of the chain of events relating to the flight and destruction of the aircraft".

³¹See, e.g., articles 9 to 36 of the 1907 Hague Convention, which contain a more elaborate description of investigation procedure than those of the 1899 Convention.

³²The creation of a Panel for Inquiry and Conciliation was provided for in General Assembly resolution 268 D (III) of 28 April 1949. The list of persons designated by 15 Member States is contained in a note by the Secretary-General dated 20 January 1961 (A/4686-S/4632). The Panel has never been used.

³³See, e.g., article 9 of both the Hague Conventions.

³⁴See, e.g., the so-called Bryan treaties which the United States entered into with a number of European and Central and South American States commencing in 1913. As to details concerning these treaties see the report of the Secretary-General on methods of fact-finding, A/5694, paras. 62-78; the Treaty to Avoid or Prevent Conflicts between the American States ("Gondra Treaty"), signed at Santiago on 3 May 1923, the League of Nations Treaty Series, vol. XXXIII, p. 25, and American Treaty on Pacific Settlement (Pact of Bogotá), signed at Bogotá on 30 April 1948, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 30, p. 55.

may be made subject to a special agreement between the parties to a dispute. A treaty may also indicate the conditions under which the jurisdiction of the established commission may be invoked by one party unilaterally³⁵ and those under which the jurisdiction may only be invoked by mutual consent.³⁶ A provision may also be made in a treaty requiring that parties, invoking the jurisdiction of the commission, draw up a protocol in which they state the question or questions which they desire the commission to elucidate. Alternatively, in another treaty, the commission of inquiry may itself define the facts to be examined.

85. The methods of work of a commission of inquiry are those aimed at enabling the commission, in accordance with the competence conferred upon it, to acquire all necessary facts in order to become fully informed of the issues giving rise to a dispute. Thus, as mentioned in paragraph 82 above, a commission of inquiry may hear the parties to a dispute, examine witnesses and experts, carry out investigations on the spot with consent of the parties and receive and review documentary evidence. The parties are, both in practice and under the relevant treaties, entitled to be represented during the proceedings by agents and counsel. Such is the case, for example, within commissions of inquiry instituted under article 26 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation (ILO). Similarly, under article 14 of the 1907 Hague Convention, the parties are entitled to appoint special agents to attend the commission of inquiry, whose duty is to represent them and to act as intermediaries between them and the commission. They are further authorized to engage counsel or advocates, appointed by themselves, to state their case and uphold their interests before the commission. Under article 21 of the Convention, "every investigation, and every examination of a locality, must be made in the presence of the agents and counsel of the parties or after they have been duly summoned". Whether or not the commission is to hold such hearings in public is also another question. In this connection, it may be noted that article 31 of the 1907 Hague Convention stipulated that "the sittings of the commission [of inquiry] are not public, nor the minutes and documents connected with the inquiry published, except in virtue of a decision of the commission taken with the consent of the parties".

86. The extent to which these techniques of acquiring evidence may be used by a commission of inquiry will depend upon the function assigned to it: whether merely to elucidate the facts in dispute and to submit a written report thereon for further use of the parties to a dispute, or to prepare a report in which it also recommends a solution to the dispute. In both instances, a written report is to be prepared and submitted by the commission either to the States parties to the dispute or to the organ of the international organization which initiated it.

³⁵See, e.g., the Pact of Bogotá, note 34, supra.

³⁶One of the so-called Bryan treaties, i.e., the Treaty between the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain of 15 September 1914 (see A/5694) (supra, note 22), para. 62, note 26.

3. Composition and other institutional aspects

87. Although reference has been made in the preceding paragraphs to inquiry mainly in the form of various commissions to be composed of a specified number of individuals, thus constituting a third-party procedure, there are certain important exceptions to that view which may now be pointed out in connection with the institutional aspects of the procedure.

88. First, it should be noted that an inquiry must not necessarily be conducted by a group of people constituting a commission or a panel. An inquiry may indeed be undertaken by one person alone. Thus the States concerned may agree to approach, for example, the Secretary-General of the United Nations or the chief administrative officer of any of the specialized agencies or of bodies within the United Nations system to appoint a special representative or a mission to carry out an inquiry on the difficulties which have arisen between such States or to investigate the events giving rise to a complaint by one State against another, with the view to bringing about an amicable solution.³⁷ Both the General Assembly and the Security Council are equally free to ask the Secretary-General of the United Nations to appoint a special representative to undertake an inquiry in connection with issues falling under their responsibilities and competence and have done so on several occasions.³⁸

89. Secondly, it should be observed that an inquiry need not always be in the nature of a third-party procedure (the appointment of either a commission or an individual to undertake an independent investigation on behalf of the parties to the dispute). In some cases, especially those involving frontier disputes, provisions have been made for an inquiry to be conducted directly between the local frontier officials of the States parties to such a dispute without involving a third party. This practice of eliminating the third-party element in an inquiry procedure exists in a number of bilateral treaties.³⁹

90. As for the third-party inquiry procedures, there are a number of questions concerning their institutional aspects, which are similar to those to be discussed in relation to the other ad hoc procedures such as conciliation commissions or arbitral tribunals. The questions include: the size of the inquiry commission; whether the commissioners are to be selected from a pre-constituted list, such as a register of experts;⁴⁰ whether to specify a particular qualification (professional competence) for the individuals to be appointed to the inquiry commission; the procedures for appointment and for filling the vacancies that may occur in the commission; the rules of procedure to be applied by the commission taking into account its method of work discussed in the preceding paragraphs; the secretariat or seat of an inquiry commission; and the financial arrangements for covering the expenses relating to the procedure.

91. Without going into the details concerning each of the institutional questions raised above, the following examples may be noted with respect to the question of composition. The 1907 Hague Convention, for example, provides that, failing the direct agreement of the parties on the composition of the commission of inquiry in the manner established under the treaty, each party to the dispute appoints two members and the four members thus designated—or, failing agreement, a third State jointly agreed upon—select the fifth. Under Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, the States parties to the Protocol elect, from a list of persons to which each of them may nominate one person, the 15 members of the International Fact-Finding Commission; as to the seven-member Chamber to be set up—unless otherwise agreed by the Parties concerned—in case an inquiry is requested, it consists of five members appointed by the President of the Commission after consultations with the Parties and of two ad hoc members to be appointed by each side. Under the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, there is a special third-party procedure constituted in accordance with article 3 of annex VIII thereto, which may be requested to carry out an inquiry and establish the facts giving rise to the dispute, and which consists of five members of which each party selects two, the fifth member being appointed by agreement by the parties to the dispute, preferably from a pre-constituted list of experts established under the Convention. While various such models exist, account should also be taken of the inquiry commissions appointed by a single authority, such as the Secretary-General of the United Nations,⁴¹ or by the various organs of the United Nations,⁴² as well as the commission of inquiry under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, which is to be appointed by the Governing Council on the proposal of the Director General.

92. As to the question of rules of procedure, it may be observed generally that commissions have enjoyed varying degrees of freedom in settling the details of such procedures. In one instance, the commission was instructed to “determine its own procedure and all questions affecting the conduct of the investigation”, subject to the provisions of the agreement which instituted it.⁴³ In another instance, the provisions of the Hague Conventions were made applicable to the commissions with respect to all points not specifically covered by the agreement on the setting up of the inquiry commission.⁴⁴ In still another instance, an agreement on the inquiry regulated in detail the procedures to be applied by the commission and provided that the rules contained in the 1907 Hague Convention would be applicable in so far as they were not at variance with the provisions of the inquiry convention.⁴⁵ A mission of inquiry dispatched by the Secretary-General of the United Nations would determine its procedures and methods of work.

93. With respect to the seat of inquiry, the following may be noted. Under the 1907 Hague Convention, it is for the parties to determine where the commission is to sit and whether it may be free to sit at another place. If the agreement to establish an inquiry pursuant to the Convention is silent on the matter, the inquiry commission would automatically sit at The Hague. The place of meeting, once fixed, cannot be altered by the commission except with the assent of the parties. According to other agreements for inquiry, the capital city of a third State as the place of the meeting of the commission was provided for⁴⁶ or it was left open for the commission to determine the country wherein it would sit, taking into consideration the greater facilities for the investigation.⁴⁷

94. When the inquiry, investigation or fact-finding process is conducted under the auspices of an international organization, the competent body will usually assemble at the headquarters or at one of the regional offices of the organization concerned, unless an on-the-spot investigation is necessary with the consent of the parties.

95. The 1907 Hague Convention provides in its article 15 that "the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration acts as registry for the commissions which sit at The Hague, and shall place its offices and staff at the disposal of the contracting Powers for the use of the commission of inquiry". It furthermore provides in its article 16 that if the commission meets elsewhere than at The Hague, it appoints a secretary general, whose office serves as registry. Under Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, the depositary (i.e., the Swiss Government) "shall make available to the Commission the necessary administrative facilities for the performance of its functions" (art. 90, para. 1 (f)).

96. As to groups appointed by the chief administrative officer of an international organization (such as the Secretary-General of the United Nations) or an organ of an international organization (such as the Governing Body of ILO), they will normally receive the required secretariat support from the organization itself.

97. As to the question of qualification, it is generally understood that the individuals to be appointed to a commission of inquiry should be specialists in the matters likely to come up in the investigation in question. Whether or not the investigation of a legal question has specifically been referred to the commission, it has proved useful to include legal experts apart from those knowledgeable in the specific subject of inquiry. It is very much up to the parties, in the final analysis, to appoint individuals possessing the qualifications necessary and relevant for each case.⁴⁸

98. With regard to financial arrangements, it may be noted that, under the relevant treaties and in practice, equal sharing of the expenses is usually the rule. Thus under the 1907 Hague Convention, each party pays its own expenses and an equal share of the expenses incurred by the commission. Provisions along the same lines are to be found in the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and in bilateral agreements providing for the establishment of ad hoc commissions of inquiry. In the case of fact-finding or inquiry proceedings conducted under the aegis of an international organization, the costs of secretariat services are usually borne by the organization concerned.

4. Outcome of the process

99. The outcome of an inquiry is a report which is prepared and submitted to the parties or bodies that instituted it. The value of the report would however vary in accordance with the function and competence given to the particular inquiry. Thus, under article 35 of the 1907 Hague Convention establishing an inquiry only for elucidating the facts, the report of the inquiry limits itself to the statement of facts as established and the parties to the dispute retain their complete freedom of action with respect to the dispute. The report is thus non-binding. In contrast, paragraph 27, article 5, of annex VIII to the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea recognizes an inquiry procedure whose results (findings of fact), unless the parties otherwise agree, are to be considered conclusive by the parties to the dispute, subject to the special procedure under the article.

100. With respect to the commissions given the competence to make recommendations on the settlement of the dispute, there are also variations of the value of the commission's report. Thus in one of the cases the parties to the dispute agreed in advance to accept the recommendations of the commission as binding.⁴⁹ In another case, the acceptance by the parties of the legal conclusions reached in the commission's report also enabled the inquiry process to play a significant role in the settlement of that dispute.⁵⁰ The Montevideo Agreement of 1915 between Chile and Uruguay, for example, provides in its article IV that "after receiving the report of the Commission the two Governments shall allow a period of six months in order to endeavour to obtain a new settlement of the dispute based on the conclusions of the Commission; and if during this fresh extension the two Governments shall not be able to arrive at a friendly solution, the dispute shall be referred to the ⁴⁸Because of the naval character of disputes investigated so far by commissions of inquiry established under the Hague Conventions, they were composed mainly of naval officers of high rank as well as jurists. In the Tubantia case the third State was explicitly requested to designate a jurist as chairman of the commission. There were also two jurists, including the Chairman, designated in the Red Crusader case.

Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague.⁵¹ Under article 29 of the ILO Constitution, each party has three months to inform the Director General of ILO whether it accepts the recommendations contained in the report of the commission.

C. Good offices

1. Main characteristics, legal framework and relation to other peaceful means under the Charter of the United Nations

101. When States parties to a dispute are unable to settle it directly between themselves, a third party may offer his good offices as a means of preventing further deterioration of the dispute and as a method of facilitating efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the dispute. Such an offer of good offices, whether upon the initiative of the third party in question or upon the request of one or more parties to the dispute, is subject to acceptance by all the parties to the dispute. In other words, the third party offering good offices, be it a single State or a group of States, an individual or an organ of a universal or regional international organization, must be found acceptable to all the parties to the dispute.

102. The third party exercising good offices normally seeks to encourage the parties to the dispute to resume negotiations, thus providing them with a channel of communication. However, there are cases in which the third party exercising good offices is authorized to do more than merely act as a go-between and is allowed to take active part in the dispute settlement process, by making proposals for its solution and holding meetings with the parties to the dispute to discuss such proposals. In such situations, the third party in question may be considered as not only contributing his good offices but also as undertaking mediation. Accordingly, good offices may be said to share a common characterization with mediation as a method of facilitating a dialogue between parties to an international dispute, aimed, as the case may be, at scaling down hostilities and tensions and designed to bring about an amicable solution of the dispute.

103. In the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, containing specific provisions establishing good offices as one of the peaceful methods of settlement of disputes, good offices is indeed treated as if it were interchangeable with mediation,⁵² suggesting that the two methods, although explicitly treated as distinct in at least one regional treaty,⁵³ are usually seen as performing functions which may sometimes not be distinguishable in practical terms. Good offices was construed in this manner because in a given dispute the role of the third party exercising good offices may change in accordance with the developments of the events relating to the dispute. Such developments, in turn, determine the nature and degree of involvement of such third party in the process of facilitating the efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the dispute, thus making it difficult to say when good offices ended and mediation began.

104. Although Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations does not specifically mention good offices among the peaceful means for the settlement of disputes between States, it has been mentioned in recent international instruments. Thus, the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes⁵⁴ places good offices on an equal footing with the other peaceful methods enumerated in Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter by providing, in its paragraph 5, as follows:

“States shall seek in good faith and in a spirit of cooperation an early and equitable settlement of their international disputes by any of the following means: negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional arrangements or agencies or other peaceful means of their own choice, including good offices. In seeking such a settlement, the parties shall agree on such peaceful means as may be appropriate to the circumstances and the nature of their dispute.”

Moreover, the 1988 Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field⁵⁵ also provides, in its paragraph 12, that “the Security Council should consider sending, at an early stage, fact-finding or good offices missions or establishing appropriate forms of United Nations presence, including observers and peace-keeping operations, as a means of preventing the further deterioration of the dispute or situation in the areas concerned”.

2. Functions

105. According to the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, in which good offices and mediation were treated interchangeably, the methods were assigned the following functions: “In case of serious disagreement or dispute, before an appeal to arms, the contracting [signatory] Powers agree to have recourse, as far as circumstances allow, to the good offices or mediation of one or more friendly Powers”.⁵⁶ The friendly Powers allowed to intervene in the dispute, as further provided in the conventions, “have the right to offer good offices or mediation even during the course of hostilities.”⁵⁷

106. Under the Pact of Bogotá, where an attempt was made to distinguish good offices from mediation, the following specific provision was made: “The procedure of good offices consists in the attempt by one or more

American Governments not parties to the controversy, or by one or more eminent citizens of any American State which is not a party to the controversy to bring the parties together, so as to make it possible for them to reach an adequate solution between themselves.”⁵⁸ The Pact further provided that “once the parties have been brought together and have resumed direct negotiations, no further action is to be taken by the State or citizens that have offered their good offices or accepted an invitation to offer them; they may, however, by agreement between the parties, be present at the negotiations.”⁵⁹

107. In a statement describing his responsibilities under the Charter, the Secretary-General made the following cogent explanation of the functions of good offices:

“Furthermore, the Security Council and other organs of the United Nations have entrusted the Secretary-General with various tasks which broadly entail the exercise of good offices. This is a very flexible term as it may mean very little or very much. But, in an age in which negotiations have to replace confrontation, I feel that the Secretary-General’s good offices can significantly help in encouraging Member States to bring their disputes to the negotiating table. Negotiations today have a character quite different from what they had in the past. Talleyrand called negotiations ‘l’art de laisser les autres suivre votre propre voie’. That, however, was true of a world which no longer exists. Today, negotiations need to take account of the great political and economic changes in our world. In order to succeed, and if the vital interests of all concerned are taken sufficiently into consideration, no party will consider it a sign of weakness to listen to a cogent argument, and accept a demonstrably reasonable outcome. The parties may retain their different outlooks, but wherever they confront one another, life imposes upon them the obligation to seek all possible points of rapprochement and try to reduce the elements of contention and conflict. The task of the United Nations and the purpose of the good offices of the Secretary-General is to make the discharge of this obligation easier. In view of the complexity of the issues which arise in our dynamic world, traditional diplomacy can no longer suffice. New methods and devices have become important.

“The process involved contributes to the growth of international law, for every resolution of a dispute, every new agreement, adds a new building-stone to the edifice of law. More immediately, it answers the needs of peace-making. It is a very complex task, requiring great discretion. One of my predecessors rightly remarked that, ‘while the Secretary-General is working privately with the parties in an attempt to resolve a delicate situation, he is criticized publicly for his inaction or even lack of interest’. In situations of confrontation, the parties to a dispute are extremely sensitive and this makes it important that they should have confidence in the impartiality or the objectivity of the United Nations and its Secretary-General. The only instrument I can use is persuasion. When successful, it is a more powerful weapon than constraint, for it makes the persuaded party an ally of the solution. But to be able to persuade, you must prove the virtues of a solution, demonstrate the need to compromise and convince the party concerned that an agreement today is much more advantageous for it than a doubtful victory tomorrow. It is here that inventiveness is essential. We have to stretch our imagination to discern points of potential agreement even where at first sight they look non-existent. Even more important is patience, the refusal to give up in the face of apparently hopeless odds. Patience is greatly helped by the realization that in so many areas some of the great problems of today reflect the accumulation of violations, mistakes and passivity stretching over long periods. Hence, the difficulty of reconciling different positions, and hence also, its acute urgency.

“As Secretary-General of the United Nations, I am encouraged when States respond positively to the offer of my services. If two parties are unable or unwilling to sit down at the same table, action from some third quarter—such as the United Nations—is indispensable. But, in such a situation, each party must feel that it will not incur a disadvantage by responding to my good offices. And, in making my good offices available, timing is of critical importance.”⁶⁰

108. The above statement underscores the fact that the third party offering its good offices must earn and maintain the confidence of the parties to the dispute and that good offices is a method which should be invoked in a timely manner so as to enhance its chances of performing the function of preventing further deterioration of disputes, while at the same time encouraging the parties to the dispute to reach an amicable settlement.

109. Good offices may be offered and undertaken: by a single State or a group of States; within the framework of an international organization such as the United Nations, its specialized agencies or other international organizations, both global or regional; or by an individual acting alone, with the advice of an established committee or with the assistance of a special or personal representative.

110. In recent practice, good offices has been undertaken as a joint effort between the United Nations and regional organizations. Apart from the Secretaries General of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Organization of American States (OAS), who have contributed their good offices individually or jointly with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, other prominent individuals such as heads of State in the respective regions have also tendered their good offices to bring about the peaceful settlement of regional disputes.

3. Application of the method

111. In certain cases States have offered their good offices directly in an effort to bring about a settlement of disputes between States before such disputes were referred to international or regional organizations. The few examples include: the United States, which in 1946 exercised its good offices in connection with the territorial dispute between France and Thailand;⁶¹ Switzerland, which tendered its good offices in connection with the Franco-Algerian conflict in 1960-1962;⁶² the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which in 1965 used its good offices in order to assist in the peaceful settlement of the India-Pakistan question connected with the Kashmir problem;⁶³ and France, which in the early 1970s exercised its good offices in relation to the Viet Nam conflict.⁶⁴

112. Good offices has been more widely used recently by the United Nations, and has continued to gain prominence as one of the methods by which the prevention and removal of disputes and situations which may threaten international peace and security could be achieved through the Organization. Some of the early occasions in which good offices was used by the United Nations may therefore be mentioned briefly. They include the Indonesia question,⁶⁵ in which the Security Council, in 1947, resolved to tender its good offices to the parties in order to assist in the pacific settlement of their dispute involving hostilities between the armed forces of the Netherlands and Indonesia. In 1956, the good offices of the United Nations (the Secretary-General on behalf of the Security Council) were also used in the Palestine question⁶⁶ to secure compliance with the armistice agreement. In 1958, a good offices mission, constituted by the Security Council and composed of two Member States (the United States and the United Kingdom), assisted in the Tunisian question⁶⁷ towards the settlement of several incidents between France and Tunisia.

113. The question of Cyprus,⁶⁸ of which the Security Council has been seized since 1964 and with respect to which the Secretary-General has been conducting good offices missions, provides a recent example. Other recent examples of United Nations activities involving the use of good offices performed by the Secretary-General or by his special or personal representative include, for example, the good offices offered to deal with the situation in Kampuchea,⁶⁹ and to deal with complaints such as that between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta arising from their dispute relating to the delimitation of the continental shelf between them.⁷⁰ The good offices of the Secretary-General have also been tendered to deal with disputes relating to Non-Self-Governing Territories or decolonization, such as those concerning the questions of East Timor,⁷¹ the Falkland Islands (Malvinas),⁷² Western Sahara,⁷³ the Comorian Island of Mayotte,⁷⁴ and also in the efforts to bring about the decolonization of Namibia by attempting to secure the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) of 30 January 1976 and 435 (1978) of 29 September 1978 embodying the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia.⁷⁵ The good offices of the Secretary-General were also called for in the context of the long-standing efforts to achieve the settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict⁷⁶ and to deal with the situation of armed conflict in Central America.⁷⁷ The Secretary-General has also contributed his good offices in the course of the settlement of a dispute relating to aerial hijacking, i.e., the incident involving Pakistan and Syria,^{78,79} and in attempting to secure the release of the American diplomatic and consular personnel held hostage in Tehran.⁸⁰

114. The good offices of the Secretary-General were also used in the context of the situation relating to Afghanistan; and were provided for in the agreements regarding the settlement of that question concluded in Geneva on 14 April 1988. Thus, the Agreement on the Interrelationships for the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan provides in its paragraph 7 as follows:

“A representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall lend his good offices to the Parties and in that context he will assist in the organization of the meetings and participate in them. He may submit to the Parties for their consideration and approval suggestions and recommendations for prompt, faithful and complete observance of the provisions of the instruments.”⁸¹ existing United Nations operations to assist in the mission of good offices of the Secretary-General, the scope of which is further elaborated in the Memorandum of Understanding annexed to the above-mentioned Interrelationships Agreement.

115. Good offices has also been undertaken as a joint effort between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the current Chairman of the Organization of African Unity to bring about the settlement of the questions of Western Sahara⁸² and of the Comorian Island of Mayotte.⁸³ There have also been similar joint good offices efforts by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of OAS to find a peaceful solution of the conflict in Central America.⁸⁴

4. Institutional and related aspects

(a) Initiation of the procedure

116. Good offices may be set in motion, as described in paragraph 101 above, either upon the initiative of a third party, whose offer has been accepted by the parties to the dispute, or by an invitation by all the parties to the dispute. Thus, the third party tendering good offices cannot impose himself upon the parties to the dispute.

117. It may be resorted to in accordance with the provisions of an applicable treaty between the parties to the dispute, specifically establishing the procedure, as is the case in the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions and in the Pact of Bogotá, or may be applied in a purely ad hoc manner, on the basis of a general obligation recognized by the parties to settle their disputes by peaceful means.

(b) Methods of work and venue

118. The third party exercising good offices normally establishes contact with the parties to the dispute through a number of informal meetings with each party, during which he ascertains the positions of both sides, and then transmits to the parties each other's positions with respect to the dispute.

119. Where direct contact between the parties to the dispute has broken down and the third party offering the good offices thus provides the only channel of communication, such a function may be performed by the third party in question by visiting the capitals of the parties to the dispute, or by the third party (e.g., the Secretary-General of the United Nations) requesting the parties to the dispute to send representatives to a meeting with him together with representatives of the other party to the dispute, or alone, at United Nations Headquarters in New York or at any other location.

120. In performing the functions assigned by the parties to the dispute, the third party contributing good offices towards the peaceful settlement of the dispute may, depending upon the nature of the dispute, and with consent of the parties, undertake field missions that would enable him to be fully acquainted with the issues involved. Thus, in the question of the Western Sahara, a number of technical missions were undertaken on behalf of the Secretary-General for that purpose.

⁸²*Supra*, note 73.

⁸³*Supra*, note 74.

⁸⁴*Supra*, note 77.

5. Termination and outcome of the process

121. Good offices is a peaceful method which, having been resorted to, may give way to other peaceful procedures accepted by the parties to the dispute. There are types of disputes with respect to which resort to good offices, in the manner determined by the parties, may constitute a clear and definite phase in which the procedure itself brings about the desired result. That, for example, is the situation envisaged in article X of the Pact of Bogotá, which reads as follows:

“Once the parties [to the dispute] have been brought together and have resumed direct negotiations, no further action is to be taken by the States or citizens that have offered their good offices or have accepted an invitation to offer them; they may, however, by agreement between the parties, be present at the negotiations.”

However, there are also types of disputes the peaceful settlement of which continues to elude the parties for a long time, thereby allowing the good offices method to remain one of the options for the possible achievement of peaceful settlement. In such situations, there is no time-limit which can be set for the termination of the good offices methods.

122. The outcome of the process depends entirely upon the attitude of the parties to the dispute. The third party exercising good offices cannot impose his will on them. Thus, in article 6 of the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions for the Pacific Settlement of Disputes, it was provided that the results of good offices “have exclusively the character of advice and never have binding force.”

D. Mediation

1. Main characteristics and legal framework

123. Mediation is a method of peaceful settlement of an international dispute where a third party intervenes to reconcile the claims of the contending parties and to advance his own proposals aimed at a mutually acceptable compromise solution.

124. Mediation as a means of settlement of international disputes has been provided for in a variety of multilateral instruments such as the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, the Inter-American Treaty on Good Offices and Mediation of 1936,⁸⁵ the Charter of the United Nations, the Pact of the League of Arab States, the Charter of the Organization of American States and the American Treaty on Pacific Settlement (Pact of Bogotá) of 1948, the Charter of the Organization of African Unity and Protocol of the Commission of Mediation, Conciliation and Arbitration of 1964,⁸⁶ the Antarctic Treaty of 1959, as well as the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV), annex), the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe of 1975 and the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes (General Assembly resolution 37/10, annex).

125. Of the international instruments mentioned above, only a few contain specific provisions on mediation procedures. The most elaborate provisions are found in part II of both the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, in which mediation and good offices are treated largely as interchangeable procedures. In contrast, the 1936 Inter-American Treaty, the 1948 Pact of Bogotá and the 1964 OAU Protocol contain provisions which deal with mediation as a distinctive method, establishing its functions and its institutional aspects, without associating it with good offices.

126. Thus, mediation as a method of peaceful settlement is more than an adjunct to negotiations. As can be seen, for example, in the practice of the United Nations, it has emerged to become a distinctive method for facilitating a dialogue between parties to an international dispute, aimed at scaling down hostilities and tensions and for achieving, through a political process controlled by the parties, an amicable solution of an international dispute. A very important, perhaps crucial feature of mediation is that it facilitates for the disputing parties recourse to a peaceful approach to the dispute.

2. Functions

127. Mediation can be resorted to for the purposes of reducing the tension which may have developed in the course of an international dispute, thereby performing a preventive function the importance of which should not be overlooked. Thus, as provided in article 8 of the two 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions, mediation may be initiated "with the object of preventing the rupture of pacific relations". The procedure is also resorted to as a method of bringing about a settlement where a dispute has occurred. In such a situation, emphasis is placed on its function of reconciling the opposing claims of the parties and promoting a solution, which could command a measure of satisfaction for the parties. Accordingly, article 4 of the two Hague Conventions provides that "[t]he part of the mediator consists in reconciling the opposing claims and appeasing the feelings of resentment which may have arisen between the States at variance". This aspect of reconciling the views of the parties is also the main function of mediation as specified in article XX of the OAU Protocol. The informality with which a mediator is to perform his function was, however, emphasized in article XII of the Pact of Bogotá which provided, in part, as follows: "The functions of the mediator or mediators shall be to assist the parties in the settlement of controversies in the simplest and most direct manner, avoiding formalities and seeking an acceptable solution."

128. The function of mediation under these circumstances may be aimed at achieving a provisional solution, such as bringing about a cease-fire when fighting has begun or to arrange a permanent solution, thus addressing the basic dispute. All this depends, however, on whether or not the dispute itself is one which is perceived by the parties as amenable to a political settlement, or one which involves legal claims and counter-claims, which can only be unravelled and solved through other peaceful means of settlement.

3. Procedural and institutional aspects

129. Mediation is a procedure which may be set in motion either upon the initiative of a third party whose offer to mediate is accepted by the parties to the dispute, or initiated by the parties to the dispute themselves agreeing to mediation. An offer of mediation may be accepted by a written agreement, for example. In an agreement signed at Montevideo on 8 January 1979, Chile and Argentina accepted the proposal to settle the dispute concerning the implementation of the 1977 Beagle Channel Award through the mediation of Cardinal Antonio Samoré. Mediation cannot be imposed upon the parties to an international dispute without their consent or their acceptance of the particular mediator. As stipulated in article III of the 1936 Inter-American Treaty on Good Offices and Mediation, article XII of the 1948 Pact of Bogotá and article XX of the 1964 OAU Protocol, the mediator or mediators are to be chosen by mutual consent of the parties.

130. Mediation is usually resorted to purely on an ad hoc basis, although it may be carried out in accordance with the provisions of an applicable treaty between the parties to the dispute. Components of the mediation technique, depending on the nature of the dispute, include the communication function, clarification of issues, drafting of proposals, search for areas of agreement between parties, elaboration of provisional arrangements to circumvent or minimize issues on which the parties remain divided as well as alternate solutions, etc., with the primary goal of an early and fundamental resolution of a dispute. It is important to demonstrate to the parties to a dispute that the prospective mediator understands their respective positions, is not biased against any of them and has the necessary skills to perform the function of mediator in the particular dispute.

131. The primary requirements of the procedure are informality and confidentiality (art. XII of the Pact of Bogotá, for example). It should be noted that the political sensitivity of the mediation as a process largely explains the fact that even post factum the parties to a dispute as well as the mediator are often reluctant to place on record except in fairly general terms all the details and nuances of the procedure they went through.

132. The role of a mediator can develop during the settlement process. In the transfer of West New Guinea case of 1962, the original role of the “moderator”, as requested by the then Secretary-General, Mr. U Thant, was that of facilitating and expediting “secret informal talks for the purpose of simply drafting an agenda for formal negotiations”. As time went on, however, the “moderator” realized that, in order to be effective, “it would have been necessary to hammer out the agreement itself at these secret, informal talks”.⁸⁷

133. With respect to composition, the procedure depends upon the type of mediator accepted by the parties to the dispute. Thus, mediation may be undertaken by a single State, by a group of States or within the framework of an international organization such as the United Nations, its specialized agencies, other international organizations, both global or regional, or national organizations and associations or by a prominent individual acting alone or with the advice of an established committee. Within the United Nations, for example, the Security Council (resolution 61 (1948) of 4 November 1948) appointed a committee of the Council to give such advice as the mediator might require with respect to his responsibilities under the resolution. In another instance (resolution 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964) the Security Council recommended that the Secretary-General designate an appropriate mediator to represent him, whereas in a different situation (resolution 123 (1957) of 21 February 1957) the Council requested its own president to examine, with the consent of the parties, any proposals which were likely to contribute towards the settlement of the dispute.

134. On various occasions, the United Nations has thus been involved in mediation efforts, namely: through the Secretary-General, undertaking mediation for the resolution of certain conflicts; or the General Assembly in certain cases recommending to the Security Council to continue the United Nations mediation work (General Assembly resolution 2077 (XX) of 18 December 1965); or the Security Council itself offering a mediation procedure. In one instance, the Security Council urged the parties concerned to accept any appropriate offer of “mediation or conciliation” (resolution 479 (1980) of 28 September 1980), then later urged that the mediation effort be continued in a coordinated manner through the Secretary-General with a view to achieving a comprehensive, just and honourable settlement, acceptable to both sides, of all the outstanding issues, on the basis of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, including respect for sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and non-interference in the internal affairs of States (resolution 514 (1982) of 12 July 1982) and further called upon the parties to cooperate with the Secretary-General in the mediation efforts with a view to achieving such settlement (resolution 598 (1987) of 20 July 1987).

135. With respect to duration and termination, it is important to note that mediation is considered as a mode of settlement which, having been tried unsuccessfully, should give way to other peaceful procedures accepted by the parties to an international dispute. In case of necessity, all procedural questions, including such steps as transition from mediation to direct negotiations or a switch from mediation to any other of the peaceful settlement means, can be agreed upon in an informal, simplified way.

⁸⁷Bunker, “West New Guinea”, memorandum, 11 August 1964, ms., Department of State, file, POL 19 West New Guinea, as quoted in Whiteman, Digest of International Law (Washington, D.C., 1971), vol. XII, p. 961.

136. A time-limit has in some cases been established for the work of mediation. In this connection, article IV of the 1936 Inter-American Treaty provided the following:

“The mediator shall determine a period of time, not to exceed six nor be less than three months for the parties to arrive at some peaceful settlement. Should this period expire before the parties have reached some solution, the controversy shall be submitted to the procedure of conciliation provided for in existing inter-American agreements.”

Another time-limit for mediation was stipulated in article XIII of the 1948 Pact of Bogotá, which reads as follows:

“In the event that the High Contracting Parties have agreed to the procedure of mediation but are unable to reach an agreement within two months on the selection of the mediator or mediators, or no solution to the controversy has been reached within five months after mediation has begun, the parties shall have recourse without delay to any one of the other procedures of peaceful settlement established in the present Treaty.”

137. Apart from establishing the time-limit during which mediation may be undertaken, there are other provisions dealing with the determination as to when the process may be considered terminated. Thus, according to article 5 of the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions, “[t]he functions of the mediator are at an end when once it is declared, either by one of the parties to the dispute or by the mediator himself, that the means of reconciliation proposed by him are not accepted.”

4. Outcome of the process

138. It is generally understood that the proposals made by the mediator for a peaceful solution of a dispute are not binding upon the parties. As stipulated in article 6 of the two Hague Conventions, they “have exclusively the character of advice and never have binding force”. Final results of mediation may be embodied in such instruments as an agreement, a protocol, a declaration, a communiqué, an exchange of letters or a “gentleman’s agreement” signed or certified by a mediator or mediators. In the Chaco boundary dispute between Bolivia and Paraguay, for example, the first protocol of agreement of 1935 was witnessed by the mediatory group of Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, Uruguay and the United States, under whose “auspices and moral guaranty” the treaty of peace, friendship and boundaries was signed in 1938.⁸⁸ The acceptance by the parties of the “moral guaranty” given by the mediators may result in a further incentive to continue negotiations. As provided in article XXI, paragraph 3, of the OAU Protocol, “[i]f the means of reconciliation proposed by the mediator are accepted, they shall become the basis of a protocol of arrangement between the parties.” Thus the outcome of mediation, though non-binding as such, may be used by the parties to arrive successfully at the settlement of the dispute. Unless otherwise agreed upon, generally no legal obligations arise for the mediator from the solution arrived at by way of mediation. However, there are instances when mediators take on themselves the rendering of further assistance, including that of a financial character, for the implementation of the findings of the mediation, or the guaranteeing of such implementation.

139. In the Indus Basin dispute case between India and Pakistan, for instance, it was first agreed in 1952, through the mediation of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, that particular engineering measures should be worked out to increase the water supply in the region. In 1960, then, after intensive negotiations undertaken by the Bank, a treaty was signed by the parties which specifically provided for such a plan, while another agreement concerning the financing of the project was signed by a group of countries and the Bank.⁸⁹

E. Conciliation

1. Main characteristics, legal framework and relation to other peaceful means under the Charter of the United Nations

140. Parties to an international dispute may agree to submit it to a peaceful settlement procedure which would, on the one hand, provide them with a better understanding of each other's case by undertaking objective investigation and evaluation of all aspects of the dispute and, on the other hand, provide them with an informal third-party machinery for the negotiation and non-judicial appraisal of each other's legal and other claims, including the opportunity for defining the terms for a solution susceptible of being accepted by them. They would thus submit the dispute to conciliation, the peaceful settlement procedure which combines the elements of both inquiry and mediation.

141. As a method of peaceful settlement of international dispute between States, conciliation evolved from a series of bilateral treaties concluded in the first decades of the twentieth century. Of considerable importance was the adoption in 1922 by the League of Nations of a resolution encouraging States to submit their disputes to conciliation commissions. Subsequently, a number of multilateral treaties established conciliation as one of the third-party procedures for the settlement of disputes under the treaty, the earliest of which was the 1928 Geneva General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes (later revised in 1949). On the other hand, in the light of the increasing and successful resort to conciliation after the Second World War, the Institute of International Law recommended that States “wishing either to conclude a bilateral conciliation convention or to submit a dispute which has already arisen to conciliation procedures before an ad hoc Commission” should adopt the rules for the solution of the questions entrusted to the conciliation commissions to be created and to that end, adopted on 11 September 1961 the Regulations on the Procedure of International Conciliation.⁹⁰

142. The Charter of the United Nations, in its Article 33, paragraph 1, mentions conciliation among the peaceful means for the settlement of disputes to which Member States shall resort. It should also be noted that both the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes refer to conciliation as one of the means that States should use when seeking an early and equitable settlement of their international disputes.

143. Other international instruments which have contributed to the evolution and development of conciliation as an independent method of peaceful settlement of international disputes distinguishable from fact-finding or inquiry include the four instruments of a regional character: the 1948 American Treaty of Pacific Settlement (the Pact of Bogotá), the 1957 European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes, the 1964 Protocol to the OAU Charter on the Commission of Mediation, Conciliation and Arbitration (as amended in 1970) and the 1981 Treaty Establishing the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States. The global multilateral treaties whose dispute settlement clauses provide for detailed conciliation procedures include the following: the 1928 Geneva General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes as revised in 1949, the 1962 Protocol Instituting a Conciliation and Good Offices Commission to be Responsible for Seeking the Settlement of Any Disputes which May Arise between States Parties to the Convention against Discrimination in Education, the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, the 1969 International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties, the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, the 1978 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in respect of Treaties, the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the 1983 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of State Property, Archives and Debts, the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer and the 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations.

2. Functions

144. Reflecting the trend started by the bilateral treaties and demonstrated in the 1922 resolution of the League of Nations, the 1949 Revised Geneva General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes included a specific provision on the functions of the conciliation, reading as follows:

⁹⁰See Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International, vol. 49 (II), 1961, pp. 385-391.

“The task of the Conciliation Commission shall be to elucidate the questions in dispute, to collect with that object all necessary information by means of enquiry or otherwise, and to endeavour to bring the parties to an agreement. It may, after the case has been examined, inform the parties of the terms of settlement which seem suitable to it, and lay down the period within which they are to make their decision.” (art. 15, para. 1)

145. A provision dealing specifically with the functions of a conciliation commission in the same terms as above is contained in article 15 of the 1957 European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes. Variations of the provision are found in article XXII of the 1948 Pact of Bogotá, in article XXIV of the 1964 OAU Protocol, in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties which became a model for subsequent multilateral treaties as reflected in articles 5 and 6 of annex V of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. In sum, these treaties give conciliation two basic functions: to investigate and clarify the facts in dispute and to endeavour to bring together the parties to the dispute in order to reach an agreement by suggesting mutually acceptable solutions to the problem.

146. The conciliation procedure, as envisaged under some of the above treaties, is also linked to negotiations by provisions specifically requiring failure of negotiations or consultations to be a precondition for initiating conciliation.⁹¹ There is also a series of treaties which specifically provide that, before a dispute may be submitted to any of the adjudicatory procedures (arbitration or judicial settlement by pre-established international courts), the parties to the dispute may first submit it to conciliation.⁹² In this context, conciliation is stipulated as a condition precedent to the judicial procedures, thus establishing the link between conciliation on the one hand and arbitration and judicial procedures on the other. An exception to such a link may, however, be noted in a treaty where it was equally specified that the parties to a dispute “may agree to submit it to an arbitration without prior recourse to the procedure of conciliation”.⁹³

⁹¹See, e.g., the Geneva General Acts of 1928 and 1949, article 1, both referring to “diplomacy”, the Pact of Bogotá, article II, referring to “negotiation”, the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, article 85, mentioning “consultations”, the 1978 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in respect of Treaties, articles 41 and 42, mentioning both “consultation and negotiation”.

⁹³See the 1957 European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes, article 4, paragraph 2, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 320, p. 102, at p. 246.

3. Application of the method

147. A number of conciliation commissions were established to deal with certain cases pursuant to the bilateral treaties since 1922 and also under the 1928 Geneva General Act. Among these are, for example, the 1929 Chaco Commission, set up under the Inter-American General Convention of Conciliation; the 1947 Franco-Siamese Commission, set up in accordance with the 1928 Geneva General Act; the 1952 Belgian-Danish Commission established under the 1927 bilateral treaty between the parties; the 1955 Franco-Swiss Commission established under the 1925 bilateral treaty between the parties; and the 1956 Italo-Swiss Commission pursuant to the 1924 bilateral treaty between them. Other conciliation commissions established on an ad hoc basis by parties to a dispute include, for example, the 1958 Franco-Moroccan Commission and, more recently, the 1981 conciliation commission between Norway and Iceland in the Jan Mayen dispute.

148. The use of conciliation has also been encouraged in the United Nations. Thus, outside the framework of the multilateral treaties concluded under its auspices, by its resolution 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, the General Assembly established a Conciliation Commission for Palestine. On 28 April 1949 the General Assembly adopted resolution 268 D (III), by which it provided for the creation of a panel for inquiry and conciliation as an instrument to facilitate the compliance by Member States with the obligation under Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations. It should also be mentioned that, within the framework of the United Nations operation in the Congo, the General Assembly, in its resolution 1474 (ES-IV) of 20 September 1960, requested the Advisory Committee on the Congo to appoint, in consultation with the Secretary-General, a conciliation commission for the Congo. The commission, which was composed of representatives of some African and Asian countries,⁹⁴ carried out its mission from 1960 to 1961. Again in 1961, the General Assembly, by its resolution 1600 (XV) of 15 April 1961, decided to establish a Commission of Conciliation for the Congo, and therefore the President of the General Assembly appointed the members of the commission.⁹⁵ However, the Government of the Congo never called on the commission to perform the function for which it was created. The Assembly also recommended in its resolution 35/52 of 4 December 1980 the use of the Conciliation Rules of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law in cases where a dispute arose in the context of international commercial relations and the parties sought an amicable settlement of that dispute by recourse to conciliation.

149. As is shown in the above-mentioned international instruments and as follows from practice and as a result of recent improvements on aspects of its institutional arrangements, it may be observed that conciliation has evolved into a method which now has two distinctive characters. There is first of all the traditional conciliation procedure, reflected in the earlier treaties, which leaves conciliation as an optional, third-party procedure, and then there is the newer conciliation procedure which emerged in the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and was further refined in the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea; both Conventions seek to make the resort to the conciliation procedure itself compulsory.

⁹⁴Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Liberia, Malaysia, Mali, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, Sudan, Tunisia and the United Arab Republic.

⁹⁵Argentina, Austria, Burma, Pakistan and Tunisia.

4. Institutional and related aspects

(a) Composition

150. In the various multilateral treaties establishing a conciliation commission, provisions are made for the appointment generally of an odd number of conciliators: usually a five-member commission but sometimes a three-member commission. Each party to the dispute has then the right to appoint either one of the three conciliators or two of the five conciliators, as the case may be. The third or the fifth conciliator, who is also often designated chairman, is normally appointed by a joint decision of the two parties to the dispute and, in some cases, by a joint decision of either the two or the four conciliators already appointed by the parties. Where difficulties arise in the appointment of either the third or the fifth member, thus preventing the completion of the composition of a commission, the parties may assign the right of making the necessary appointment in such a case to a third party, usually a prominent individual.⁹⁶ All these provisions take into account the requirement that the parties to the dispute may not have more than one, or a designated number, of their respective nationals appointed to the commission.

151. There are also certain variations in the actual composition and procedure for the appointment of a conciliation commission on the basis of a list of conciliators established and maintained, pursuant to a treaty provision creating permanent conciliation commissions. As mentioned in paragraph 148 above, the usefulness of such a list was endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 268 D (III) of 28 April 1949. Both the 1948 Pact of Bogotá and the 1964 OAU Protocol established such a list. The process of establishing and maintaining a permanent list would then ensure that only individuals possessing the necessary qualifications for dealing with the types of disputes likely to arise under a particular treaty are included.

152. Of the multilateral treaties, the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties included an annex on conciliation whose paragraphs 1 and 2 are relevant to the question of the composition of a conciliation commission on the basis of a pre-constituted list of specified types of experts. The two paragraphs read as follows:⁹⁷

⁹⁶But see article 7 of the European Convention which provides that, in such a case, appointment should be tried first by a third State, failing which it should be made by the President of the International Court of Justice.

⁹⁷Compare in this connection a more elaborate provision on conciliation in section 2 of annex V of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, articles 1-3, based on the above model. (The Convention is not yet in force; reference to it throughout the present handbook recognizes its current status.)

“1. A list of conciliators consisting of qualified jurists shall be drawn up and maintained by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. To this end, every State which is a Member of the United Nations or a party to the present Convention shall be invited to nominate two conciliators, and the names of the persons so nominated shall constitute the list. The term of a conciliator, including that of any conciliator nominated to fill a casual vacancy, shall be five years and may be renewed. A conciliator whose term expires shall continue to fulfil any function for which he shall have been chosen under the following paragraph.

“2. When a request has been made to the Secretary-General under article 66, the Secretary-General shall bring the dispute before a conciliation commission constituted as follows:

“(a) one conciliator of the nationality of that State or of one of those States, who may or may not be chosen from the list referred to in paragraph 1; and

“(b) one conciliator not of the nationality of that State or of any of those States, who shall be chosen from the list.

“The State or States constituting the other party to the dispute shall appoint two conciliators in the same way. The four conciliators chosen by the parties shall be appointed within sixty days following the date on which the Secretary-General receives the request.

“The four conciliators shall, within sixty days following the date of the last of their own appointments, appoint a fifth conciliator chosen from the list, who shall be chairman.

“If the appointment of the chairman or of any of the other conciliators has not been made within the period prescribed above for such appointment, it shall be made by the Secretary-General within sixty days following the expiry of that period. The appointment of the chairman may be made by the Secretary-General either from the list or from the membership of the International Law Commission. Any of the periods within which appointments must be made may be extended by agreement between the parties to that dispute.

“Any vacancy shall be filled in the manner prescribed for the initial appointment.”

153. The above text established the trend in which attempts are made to avoid the institutional problems of the traditional conciliation whose composition is largely left in the hands of the parties to the dispute through direct appointment of the conciliators. The traditional conciliation thus remains a process which may be brought to an end or prevented from being set in motion, for example, simply by one of the parties to the dispute declining to respond to the invitation of the other party to constitute a conciliation commission. In contrast, the trend contained in the above text permits the constitution of the commission to be undertaken by a third party, namely, the Secretary-General of the United Nations using the list of conciliators he is required to maintain.

(b) Initiation of the process

154. A conciliation procedure may be set in motion in two ways: either by mutual consent of the States parties to an international dispute, on an ad hoc basis, relying upon a treaty in force between them and creating an obligation to settle such dispute by peaceful means; or in accordance with the terms of an applicable treaty which either specifies the details of how an ad hoc conciliation may be constituted thereunder or establishes a permanent conciliation commission within the treaty itself.

155. The treaties addressing the details of the conciliation procedure will invariably make the important choice as to whether the initiation of the process and the establishment of a conciliation commission should only be by mutual consent of the parties to the dispute or whether the procedures of the conciliation commission may be invoked by an action of only one of the parties to the dispute. The first choice is reflected in the traditional mode of conciliation, which is completely optional. The second choice, which is aimed at setting in motion a conciliation procedure through an independent compulsory process relying upon the request of only one party, reflects the newer trend started in the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. The trend was refined in the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, in which the traditional conciliation in article 284 and section 1 of annex V to the Convention is clearly distinguished from section 2 of the annex, specifically providing that any party to a dispute invited to submit to the conciliation procedure, as established under the relevant part of the Convention, "shall be obliged to submit to such proceedings" and that "failure of a party or parties to the dispute to reply to notification of institution of proceedings or to submit to such proceedings shall not constitute a bar to the proceedings". Attention must however be drawn to the fact that, under this approach, it is the resort to the procedure which is compulsory. The outcome of the conciliation itself remains non-binding, as in the traditional approach. The Law of the Sea Convention accordingly provides the parties with option to use the traditional conciliation or the new "compulsory" conciliation.

(c) Rules of procedure and methods of work

156. With respect to the question of rules of procedure, most of the treaties simply provide that the commission "shall decide its own procedure" or that the commission shall, "unless the parties otherwise agree, determine its own procedure". While the treaties do not thus include detailed rules of procedure for the commission, most of them address the question of decision-making. They provide that the decision of the commission on procedural matters and on other matters such as its report and recommendations shall be made by a majority vote of its members.

157. The Regulations on the Procedure of International Conciliation,⁹⁸ referred to in paragraph 141 above, provide that the Commission will name its Secretary at its first meeting and will determine the rules of procedure, in particular the question of the submission by the parties of written pleadings as well as the question of the time and the place where the agents and counsel of the parties, as the case might be, should be heard.

158. As to the method of work, it should be recalled that conciliation combines elements of fact-finding and that it would accordingly rely upon certain techniques for gathering and evaluating the facts giving rise to the dispute. Thus in all treaties establishing conciliation as a third-party procedure there are provisions giving the commission the right to hear the parties, to examine their claims and objections and make proposals for an amicable solution or to draw the attention of the parties to the dispute to any measures which might facilitate an amicable settlement. In carrying out its functions, the commission may also summon and hear witnesses and experts and visit, with the consent of the parties, the localities in question. Other provisions provide also the right of the parties to the dispute to be represented before the commission by agents, counsel and experts appointed by them, while also being required to supply the commission with the necessary documents and information which would facilitate its work. Some treaties provide that, unless the parties otherwise agree, the work of the commission is not to be conducted in public.⁹⁹ If a commission is able to conclude its work, it would prepare and submit a formal report containing its recommendations. Where it has not been able to reach a settlement, the commission is still expected under certain treaties to prepare the minutes of its proceedings or procès-verbaux in which no mention shall be made as to whether the commission's decisions were taken unanimously or by a majority vote.¹⁰⁰ In certain treaties, there are provisions allowing conciliators to submit separate opinions if necessary.

(d) Duration and termination

159. Consistent with its function as a method capable of bringing about an amicable settlement of the dispute referred to it or with its function of providing the necessary link between the non-judicial and the judicial procedures where so required, conciliation should be expected to reach its desired result within a reasonable time. Thus, as to duration, various time-limits within which a conciliation commission is expected to conclude its work have been stipulated. A six-month duration is common in earlier multilateral treaties; 12 months is now the duration of conciliation found in recent multilateral treaties influenced by the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, annex, paragraph 6.

160. Since a conciliation commission may indeed conclude its work before the fixed time-limit or may, with the consent of the parties, extend its work beyond the fixed time-limit, it is important to establish when the process may be said to have been terminated, thus opening the way, if a settlement has not been reached, for the other means for the settlement of the dispute under a treaty. While the earlier multilateral treaties and those modelled after the annex to the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties do not address the question of termination of conciliation, the issue was taken up in the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which contains in its annex V, article 8, the following provision:

¹⁰⁰Geneva General Acts of 1928 and 1949, article 15, paragraph 2; and the 1957 European Convention, article 15, paragraph 2. See also the 1948 Pact of Bogotá, article XXVII, calling for the preparation of a summary of the work of the commission in case it receives no settlement.

“The conciliation proceedings are terminated when a settlement has been reached, when the parties have accepted or one party has rejected the recommendations of the report by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, or when a period of three months has expired from the date of transmission of the report to the parties.”

(e) Expenses and other financial arrangements

161. Taking into account the administrative expenses that may be provided free by virtue of using existing secretariats, all the other expenses connected with the functioning of conciliation commissions are to be borne by the parties to the dispute. In most of the treaties, it is stipulated that such expenses shall be divided equally, while in others the manner in which the expenses are to be borne by the parties is left open. Since the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties is silent on this point, it is important to note that the Secretary-General of the United Nations has since addressed the question in connection with conciliation under the treaty. He has indicated that no honorariums could be paid by the United Nations to members of commissions unless the General Assembly specifically so decided and that he interpreted the expression “expenses of the Commission” to mean “the expenses involved in the functioning of the conciliation commission as a body”, which would include travel and subsistence costs of members, the provision of a meeting place and of the necessary secretariat services for the meetings, but would not include expenses before a commission is constituted or after it has finished its work, or the individual expenses of the parties (travel, subsistence and honorariums of their agents and counsel and of witnesses called by them, cost of preparation of written pleadings in the language of submission, etc.).¹⁰¹

(f) Venue and secretariat of the commission

162. Unless a conciliation commission is permanently created under a treaty in which its seat or secretariat is also established, an ad hoc commission may meet at the place selected by the parties to the dispute or by its chairman, as may be agreed. In such cases, the venue of the commission could be the alternate capitals of the parties to the dispute or other places within their respective territories, or perhaps in some neutral place in a third State. All these possibilities would take into account, among other things, the need to have available the necessary facilities which would enable the commission to perform its task with minimum difficulties.

163. While the permanent commissions may normally use their designated seats, they are also free, for reasons of practicality, to decide to meet at another place in connection with a given case. In making their choices, account should be taken of the fact that the lack of an efficient administrative secretariat, i.e., an administrative machinery on which a commission could rely, may hamper its work. The question of a secretariat may thus loom large in the case of ad hoc commissions. However, those created under the auspices of global or regional international organizations would normally avail themselves of secretariat arrangements which the organization may provide.

5. Termination and outcome of the process

164. It is well established that the results of a conciliation process are normally in the form of non-binding recommendations to the parties to the dispute. Thus the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties codified the practice in paragraph 6 of its annex establishing conciliation which reads, in part, as follows:

“The report of the Commission, including any conclusions stated therein regarding the facts or questions of law, shall not be binding upon the parties and it shall have no other character than that of recommendations submitted for the consideration of the parties in order to facilitate an amicable settlement of the dispute.”

165. Certain treaties have, however, subsequently departed from the above practice by either introducing variations to it or by giving the outcome of conciliation a binding character. Thus, the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character has the following provision in its article 85, paragraph 7, on the outcome of the conciliation procedure:

“The recommendations in the report of the Commission shall not be binding on the parties to the dispute unless all the parties to the dispute have accepted them. Nevertheless, any party to the dispute may declare unilaterally that it will abide by the recommendations in the report so far as it is concerned.” (emphasis added)

166. Another variation is found in the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer, providing that: “The Commission shall render a final and recommendatory award, which the parties shall consider in good faith” (emphasis added). Thus, the results of the commission may be seen as having some legal effects since they are in the form of recommendations which the parties are required to consider in good faith.

167. A complete departure from the model provided for in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties is, however, found in the 1981 Treaty establishing the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, which created a conciliation procedure whose recommendations are compulsory and binding. Thus, paragraph 3 of article 14 of the Treaty provides that “Member States undertake to accept the conciliation procedure referred to in the preceding paragraph as compulsory. Any decisions or recommendations of the Conciliation Commission in resolution of the dispute shall be final and binding on the Member States". Moreover, in the annex establishing conciliation as the procedure for settlement of dispute under the treaty, paragraph 6 reads, in part, that "[t]he report of the Commission, including any conclusions stated therein regarding the facts or questions of law, shall be binding upon the parties".

F. Arbitration

1. Main characteristics and legal framework

168. The 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes described the object of international arbitration as the settlement of disputes between States by judges chosen by the parties themselves and on the basis of respect for law.¹⁰² They further provided that recourse to the procedure implied submission in good faith to the award of the tribunal. Accordingly, one of the basic characteristics of arbitration is that it is a procedure which results in binding decisions upon the parties to the dispute.

169. The power to render binding decisions is, therefore, a characteristic which arbitration shares with the method of judicial settlement by international courts whose judgements are not only binding but also, as in the case of the International Court of Justice, final and without appeal, as indicated in article 60 of the I.C.J. Statute. For this reason, arbitration and judicial settlement are both usually referred to as compulsory means of settlement of disputes.

170. However, while both arbitration and judicial settlement are similar in that respect, the two methods of settlement are nevertheless structurally different from each other. Arbitration, in general, is constituted by mutual consent of the States parties to a specific dispute where such parties retain considerable control over the process through the power of appointing arbitrators of their own choice.¹⁰³ By contrast, judicial settlement relies upon pre-constituted international courts or tribunals, the composition of which is not to the same extent subject to control by the parties to the dispute.

171. For the purposes of the present handbook, the study of arbitration has been limited to the study of such institutions established between States, ¹⁰²See articles 15 and 37 respectively of the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes (supra, note 21).

in which States plead directly; and between States and international organizations.¹⁰⁴

172. Apart from the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions, arbitration, as a means of peaceful settlement of disputes between States, is provided in a number of multilateral treaties of global or regional character and also in a number of bilateral treaties.¹⁰⁵ Arbitration has thus emerged as one of the third-party procedures most frequently chosen for settling, for example, territorial and boundary disputes,¹⁰⁶ disputes concerning interpretation of bilateral or multilateral treaties,¹⁰⁷ and those relating to claims of violation of international law.¹⁰⁸ It may be observed in this connection that both the 1899

¹⁰⁴There are other types of arbitration tribunals to which States as well as their nationals have access and to which they are allowed to submit claims. These tribunals were in general referred to as Mixed Arbitration Tribunals. An early and perhaps the most important example of this type of tribunal is the Mixed Arbitral Tribunals set up after the First World War by the Treaty of Versailles, Article 304, see Recueil des décisions des Tribunaux arbitraux mixtes 1922-1930, 10 vols.

The most contemporary practice of Mixed Arbitral Tribunals is the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal set up by the Algiers Declaration in 1981. See Article II of the Declaration of the Government of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria Concerning the Settlement of Claims by the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, International Legal Materials, vol. 20, p. 230. For the collection of the decisions of the Tribunal, see Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal Reports, (1981-), 21 volumes of which are so far printed.

and the 1907 Hague Conventions established the Permanent Court of Arbitration to facilitate the settlement of disputes which diplomacy had failed to settle,¹⁰⁹ while the American Treaty on Pacific Settlement (Pact of Bogotá) of 30 April 1948 provided that States parties might, if they so agree, submit to arbitration “differences of any kind, whether judicial or not”.¹¹⁰

173. There are, however, types of disputes which States have excluded from arbitration constituted under a particular treaty, such as disputes arising from facts or events which occurred prior to the treaty establishing the arbitral procedure in question,¹¹¹ disputes relating to questions which are within the exclusive jurisdiction of a State,¹¹² disputes which concern the territorial integrity of a State,¹¹³ disputes concerning military activities, including military activities by government vessels and aircraft engaged in non-commercial service,¹¹⁴ and disputes in respect of which the Security Council of the United Nations is exercising the functions assigned to it in the Charter of the United Nations, unless the Security Council decides to remove the matter from its agenda or calls upon the parties to settle it by another peaceful procedure.¹¹⁵

2. Institutional and related aspects

(a) Types of arbitration agreements

174. Consent of the parties to arbitration may be expressed prior to or after the occurrence of a dispute. Parties may agree to submit all or special categories of future disputes to arbitration. Such commitment may be made in multilateral or bilateral treaties entirely devoted to the peaceful settlement of disputes.¹¹⁶ A more common method is by inclusion of a compromissory

¹⁰⁹Article 38 of the 1907 Hague Convention. The 1899 and the 1907 Conventions established the Permanent Court of Arbitration, which still exists and has its seat at The Hague. It has an International Bureau serving as a Registry for the Court. As provided in articles 21 and 42 of the two Hague Conventions, respectively, “The Permanent Court is competent for all arbitration cases, unless the parties agree to institute a special tribunal”. Membership of the Court is constituted by a general list to which each Contracting Party to the Conventions has the right to nominate four individuals as arbitrators.

¹¹⁶One of the well-known multilateral general dispute settlement agreements is the Hague Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes of 18 October 1907. It was one of the more successful first attempts to design a multilateral convention aimed specifically at proposing a variety of means and procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes. The Convention establishes a system of arbitration for which new agencies were created. The most important part of the Convention was devoted to the organization and the operation of the Permanent Court of Arbitration. The Permanent Court was created with the object of facilitating an immediate recourse to arbitration of international disputes which could not be settled by diplomacy.

The Revised General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes of 1949 is another important multilateral general dispute settlement agreement. Chapter III is devoted to clause in a treaty, by which parties agree to submit all or part of their future disputes regarding that treaty to arbitration. Parties may also agree to go to arbitration by a special agreement or a compromis after the occurrence of a dispute.

175. A compromissory clause is a provision in a treaty which provides for the settlement by arbitration of all or part of the disputes which may arise in regard to the interpretation or application of that treaty. Many compromissory clauses are drafted in general terms.¹¹⁷ The compromissory clauses, while expressing the consent of the parties to submit all or certain types of disputes to arbitration, generally lack specificity as to the rules of establishment and operation of the tribunal. To submit a dispute to arbitration under a compromissory clause, the parties usually need to conclude a special agreement (compromis).

176. The special agreements (compromis) are however more comprehensive because they deal with the constitutional aspects of the arbitral tribunal being set up. Thus in a compromis the parties to the dispute may deal with the following issues:¹¹⁸ the composition of the tribunal, including the size and the manner of appointments and the filling of vacancies; the appointment of agents of the parties to the dispute; the questions to be decided by the tribunal; the rules of procedure and method of work of the tribunal including, where applicable, the languages to be used; the applicable law; the seat and administrative aspects of the tribunal, the financial arrangements for the expenses of the tribunal and the binding nature of the award of the tribunal and obligations and rights of the parties relating thereto.

177. While the above is only illustrative of the issues to be covered by a compromis as a minimum, the degree of their incorporation in a compromis differs in each case as decided by the parties to a dispute. Thus, some compromis are silent on the question of applicable law,¹¹⁹ while others include provisions concerning privileges and immunities of the members of the arbitral tribunal,¹²⁰ and yet others address the question of interim arrangements arbitration. The chapter provides a system for the establishment of the tribunal, including the mode of appointment and number of arbitrators, the cases of vacancies and so forth. Under article 21 of the Revised General Act the parties may agree to a different mode of establishing the tribunal. See United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 71, p. 101.

An example of a bilateral treaty wholly devoted to the peaceful settlement of disputes is the Treaty for Conciliation, Judicial Settlement and Arbitration (with annexes) between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Switzerland, signed at London on 7 July 1965. Chapter IV of the Treaty is devoted to arbitration. It sets out the number of arbitrators, their nationality and their appointment. It also deals with the question of vacancy and the scope of the competence of the arbitration tribunal. The annex to this Treaty contains recommended rules of procedure for the arbitration tribunal that the parties may wish to choose. Under article 15 of the Treaty the parties may agree to a different mode of establishment of the arbitral tribunal. See ibid., vol. 605, p. 205.

for preserving the respective rights of the parties to the dispute, pending the conclusion of the work of the arbitral tribunal in question.¹²¹ Some compromis are brief and contain only essential elements without dealing with administrative and financial aspects of the tribunal, its method of work or rules of procedure.¹²² However, there are recent examples of more elaborate ones, such as the Compromis of 10 July 1975 between France and the United Kingdom concerning the delimitation of the continental shelf¹²³ and the Compromis of arbitration of 11 July 1978 between the United States and France concerning an Air Service Agreement.¹²⁴

(b) Composition

178. Arbitration as a third-party procedure may be performed by one individual, appointed by the parties to the dispute, as a sole arbitrator or umpire,¹²⁵ or by a group of individuals appointed to form an arbitral tribunal.¹²⁶ In most treaties establishing an arbitration tribunal, an odd number of arbitrators is usually provided: some require five arbitrators¹²⁷ while the most common practice has been arbitral tribunal of three members.¹²⁸ Each party to the dispute has then the right to appoint either one of the three arbitrators,

II, p. 1312; the Compromis of 11 July 1978 between the United States and France in the case concerning the air service agreement, paragraph 3, in ibid., vol. XVIII, p. 421, at p. 422.

XII, p. 17; and The Island of Palmas in ibid., vol. II, p. 830. Some multilateral conventions have also provided for a single arbitrator, e.g., the Convention on the International Hydrographic Organization of 3 May 1967, article XVII, in United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 751, p. 41; the European Agreement concerning an Aeronautical Satellite Programme of 9 December 1971, article 13, in ibid., vol. 906, p. 3 and the Agreement for the establishment of the Caribbean Meteorological Organization of 19 October 1973, article 23, in ibid., vol. 946, p. 543.

¹²⁶There is no limit on the number of arbitrators. The parties may agree on as many arbitrators as they wish.

¹²⁷See, e.g., Geneva General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, article 22, League of Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 93, p. 345. See also, e.g., the agreement between the United Kingdom and France of 10 July 1975 regarding the establishment of an arbitration tribunal for the resolution of the Continental Shelf boundary disputes in the English Channel providing for a court of arbitration consisting of five members: one member appointed each by France and by the United Kingdom, and three neutral members, UNIRAA, vol. XVIII, p. 5, article 1 of the compromis. The compromis of 11 September 1986 between Egypt and Israel regarding their boundary dispute in the Taba beachfront established a five-member tribunal. Each party appointed one member and the three other members, one of which was the president, were appointed by the parties jointly. See article 1 of the compromis, International Legal Materials, vol. 26, p. 1. See also Agreement on Safeguards under the Non-Proliferation Treaty on 5 April of 1973, article 22, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 1008, p. 3; the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, annex VII, article 3, and annex VIII, article 3, supra, note 114, pp. 150 and 153 respectively.

or two of the five arbitrators as the case may be. The third or the fifth arbitrator, who is also often designated chairman, is normally appointed by a joint decision of parties to the dispute and, in some cases, by a joint decision of the respective arbitrators already appointed by the parties. Where difficulties arise in the appointment of either the third or the fifth member, thus preventing the completion of the composition of the tribunal, the parties to the dispute may assign the right of making the necessary appointment in such a case to a third State, or a prominent individual.¹²⁹ The provisions on the composition of the tribunal that stipulate the period within which the individuals assigned the duty to make such necessary appointments have to discharge the duty (e.g., within 60 days from the date of the reference of the dispute to arbitration)¹³⁰ and also the time period within which the parties to the dispute are required to make their respective initial appointments to the tribunal (e.g., 30 days from the same date of reference of the dispute to arbitration)¹³¹ in accordance with terms of the applicable treaty. The provisions also address the questions of filling any vacancy which may occur in the tribunal and usually stipulate that such vacancies are to be filled in the same manner as the initial appointment.¹³²

179. Some arbitral tribunals are composed of individuals appointed by the parties relying upon a pre-constituted list of arbitrators such as that of the Permanent Court of Arbitration established under the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions,¹³³ while other arbitral tribunals are composed without the benefit of a pre-con-

¹²⁹See, e.g., article 45 of the 1907 Hague Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, in which the task is assigned to a third State, and article 23 of the 1949 Revised General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, in which that appointment task is first assigned to a third State and then to the President of the International Court of Justice. The President of ICJ is alone provided in article 21 of the 1957 European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes. Under the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, annex VIII, article 3 (e), the appointment is to be made by a third State first and then by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

There may be cases where one party to a dispute refuses to appoint its arbitrator and therefore prevents the composition of the tribunal. See the analysis of such a situation and the opinion of the International Court of Justice in the second phase of the Interpretation of Peace Treaties, I.C.J. Reports 1950, pp. 228 and 229; and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice in the Applicability of the Obligation to Arbitrate under section 21 of the United Nations Headquarters Agreement of 26 June 1947 (I.C.J. Reports 1988, p. 12). To remedy this impasse, an alternative appointing authority may be chosen. This would allow the appointment to be made by the appointing authority if one party fails to appoint its member within a specified period of time.

stituted list.¹³⁴ In both types of arbitrations, however, the question of nationality and the qualifications of arbitrators are usually addressed. In some cases, the parties stipulate in the arbitration agreement specific qualifications of the individuals appointed as arbitrators.¹³⁵

(c) Rules of procedure

180. Some compromis, after specifying certain rules of procedure, leave the determination of the remaining procedural questions entirely to the arbitration tribunal. For example, one compromis provided that "the Tribunal shall, subject to the provisions of this compromis, determine its own procedure and all questions affecting the conduct of the arbitration."¹³⁶ Another compromis granted a broad competence to the arbitrator in the determination of its own rules of procedure. It provided that "the arbitrator shall decide any questions of procedure which may arise during the course of the arbitration."¹³⁷ Similarly, a broad competence was provided for another tribunal. The compromis of that tribunal stated that "the Court shall, subject to the provisions of this Agreement, determine its own rules of procedure and all questions affecting the conduct of the arbitration".¹³⁸ Another formulation of a broad language is found in a compromis which read: "The arbitrator shall have the necessary jurisdiction to establish procedure and to dictate without any restriction whatsoever other resolutions which may arise as a consequence of the question formulated, and which, in conformity with his judgement, may be necessary to expedite to fulfil in a just and honourable manner the purposes of this Convention".¹³⁹ Some compromis, on the other hand, have used a more restrictive language in granting full competence to the tribunal to set rules of procedure. For example, one compromis, after specifying rules of procedure for the arbitration tribunal, provided that: "In determining upon such further procedure and arranging subsequent meetings, the tribunal will consider the individual or joint requests of the agents of the two governments".¹⁴⁰ Another agreement instructs the tribunal to ascertain the views of the parties before determining a particular rule of procedure.¹⁴¹

(d) Applicable law

181. Parties to an arbitration may agree on the law that the tribunal should apply to their disputes. Some arbitration agreements require that specific rules be applied¹⁴² and some only make a general reference to the applicable law. Many arbitration agreements specifically stipulate international law as the applicable law,¹⁴³ and some call for the application of the principles of international law.¹⁴⁴ Some arbitration agreements have remained silent on this issue. In such cases a solution has been recommended in article 28 of the 1949 Revised General Act. Accordingly, if nothing is laid down in the arbitration agreement on the law applicable to the merits of the dispute, the tribunal should apply the substantive rules enumerated in article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice.¹⁴⁵

182. Still other arbitration agreements have chosen principles of equity, justice, equitable solution, etc., as applicable to the dispute.¹⁴⁶ The application of these principles is recommended by article 28 of the 1949 Revised General Act as the last resort, where there is no applicable law as enumerated in Article 38 of the Statute of the Court. Article 28 of the Revised General Act reads:

“If nothing is laid down in the special agreement or no special agreement has been made, the Tribunal shall apply the rules in regard to the substance of the dispute enumerated in Article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. In so far as there exists no such rule applicable to the dispute, the Tribunal shall decide ex aequo et bono.”¹⁴⁷

(e) Methods of work and proceedings before the tribunal

183. Parties to a dispute submitted to an arbitral tribunal are represented by agents whose appointment and powers may be stipulated in the *compromis*¹⁴⁸ indicating the time-period within which they are to be appointed.¹⁴⁹ Such

¹⁴⁷United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 71, p. 101.

¹⁴⁸While some compromis do not address specifically the question of agents as such, parties to the dispute proceed to be presented by their agents in the tribunal. See, e.g., the 30 June 1964 Compromis of arbitration between Italy and the United States concerning their mutual air transport agreement, ibid., vol. 529, p. 314.

¹⁴⁹While some compromis do not address the question of time-limits for the appointment of the agents, see the 22 January 1963 Compromis of arbitration between France and the United States, ibid., vol. 473, p. 3; others have stipulated a time-limit. See, e.g., the 14-day period stipulated in the France-United Kingdom compromis of 10 July 1975, UNIRAA, vol. XVIII, p. 5, article 4, and also in the 24 February 1955 Compromis between Greece and the United Kingdom in the Ambatielos arbitration, ibid., vol. XII, p. 88, article 4.

agents are usually entitled to nominate an assistant agent as occasion may require, and may be further assisted by such advisers, counsel and staff as the agent deems necessary.

184. The agents of the parties to the dispute file written pleadings which may be limited to memorials and counter-memorials¹⁵⁰ and which may be submitted in the order and within the time-limits determined by the Tribunal. Such determination may also be made by the tribunal with respect to the oral proceedings¹⁵¹ and relevant documentary evidence. Thus, in the compromis relating to the arbitration of a boundary dispute, the following was stipulated:

“The Court of arbitration shall, subject to the provisions of the present Agreement (Compromiso), after consultation with the Parties, determine the order and dates of the delivery of written pleadings and maps and all other questions of procedure, written and oral, that may arise. The fixing of the order in which these documents shall be delivered shall be without prejudice to any question of burden of proof.”¹⁵²

185. With respect to the question of documentary evidence, article 75 of the 1907 Hague Convention provided that “the parties undertake to supply the tribunal, as fully as they consider possible, with all the information required for deciding the dispute.”¹⁵³

186. As appropriate, arbitral tribunals have also heard witnesses on behalf of parties to the dispute and have also made use of expert witnesses providing expert opinion to the tribunal in a given issue, as may be explicitly stated in a compromis.¹⁵⁴ The arbitrators as well as the parties to the dispute have the right to cross-examine such witnesses in the manner stipulated in a compromis.¹⁵⁵ These methods of work are usually employed in boundary disputes with respect to which arbitral tribunals also exercise the right to conduct their own investigations and, with the consent of the parties, visit the localities of the dispute.

(f) Seat and administrative aspects of an arbitral tribunal

187. The seat of the arbitral tribunal is usually specified in the compromis. Where there is no such specification, the Tribunal itself may, ¹⁵⁰See, e.g., article 5 in the Ambatielos arbitration, ibid.

¹⁵¹Some compromis do not provide for oral proceedings, while others leave it to the determination of the tribunal as appropriate.

¹⁵²*Ibid.*, vol. XVI, p. 119. A similar provision was stipulated in the 22 July 1971 compromise between Argentina and Chile concerning the Beagle Channel arbitration. See Cmd. 4781.

¹⁵⁴See, e.g., the 30 July 1954 Compromis between the United Kingdom and Saudi Arabia, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 201, p. 317, articles 7 and 10.

¹⁵⁵See, e.g., the 30 June 1965 Compromis between India and Pakistan regarding boundary arbitration, UNIRAA, vol. XVII, p. 9, and the 16 July 1930 compromis between Guatemala and Honduras, ibid., vol. II, p. 1312.

as recommended by its president,¹⁵⁶ determine where to conduct its business.

188. The arbitration agreement can also specify the place where the tribunal shall hold its first meeting and leave the choice of the place for subsequent meetings to the tribunal. The choice of the seat of the tribunal is made on the basis of administrative convenience and financial considerations. For example, when the tribunal is required to work in two languages, it would be easier to hold its meetings in a place where there was easy access to interpreters and translators as well as clerks who could work in both languages. There are other administrative and technical considerations which would come into consideration in choosing the place of the tribunal.

189. Arbitral tribunals are usually assisted by a secretariat or a registry. The function of the registry is to act as a channel for communication between the parties and the tribunal, to arrange for the custody of papers and documents submitted to the tribunal, to provide interpreters and translators and to conduct all administrative matters of the tribunal. Standing tribunals, which deal with a number of disputes over a long period of time, normally have an organized secretariat established in accordance with the compromis. For ad hoc tribunals, the parties may agree to empower the tribunal or its president to appoint a secretary or a registrar and such supporting staff as may be necessary. The parties may also agree to appoint jointly a secretary or a registrar, and each appoints supporting staff in equal numbers.

(g) Expenses of an arbitral tribunal

190. Two kinds of expenses are involved in an arbitration proceeding. One relates to the preparation of each party's case and its presentation to the arbitral tribunal. Such expenses include, for example, counsel's fees, experts' fees, expenses for gathering of evidence, translation of documents, travel and so forth which are borne by the parties themselves. Other expenses include the common expense of the arbitral tribunal, such as the arbitrators' fees, the salary of the registrar and the staff of the arbitral tribunal, interpreters, clerical facilities and so forth.

191. Parties to the disputes bear their own expenses and share the administrative costs of the tribunal. In common practice the arbitrators' fees are borne equally by both parties. Occasionally, however, some compromis provide that each party pay the fees of their appointed arbitrator.¹⁵⁷ If the parties provide technical assistance to the arbitral tribunal, each party is responsible for the remuneration of its own expert.

¹⁵⁶See, e.g., article 5 of the 10 July 1975 Compromis between France and the United Kingdom in the case concerning the delimitation of the continental shelf, ibid., vol. XVIII, pp. 5 and 6.

¹⁵⁷See, for example, the Convention for arbitration of questions regarding the Jurisdictional Rights in Bering Sea of 29 February 1892, in Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. 5, p. 4762, article 12; the Compromis of 16 June 1930 between Honduras and Guatemala, UNIRAA, vol. II, p. 1313, article XIX; and the Compromis of 22 January 1963 between the United States and France, ibid., vol. XVI, p. 9, article VIII.

3. Outcome of arbitration and related issues

192. The outcome of an arbitration is an award which is binding upon the parties to the dispute. Invariably, in all the compromis, parties to the dispute further stipulate that they undertake to abide by the decision of the arbitral tribunal in question.

193. The arbitral awards are usually in writing, signed and dated. Depending upon the rules of procedure adopted by a particular tribunal, certain compromis specifically provide that the decision of the tribunal would be adopted by a majority vote of its members,¹⁵⁸ while others also give arbitrators the right to file a separate or dissenting opinion.¹⁵⁹

194. After an award has been rendered, it may be subject to correction or revision in connection with obvious errors such as clerical, typographical or arithmetical errors especially as suggested in the ILC Model Rules.¹⁶⁰ An award may also be subject to interpretation. Article 82 of the 1907 Hague Convention provides for a general competence for the arbitral tribunal which rendered the award to interpret it.¹⁶¹ Some arbitration agreements have contemplated the possibility of the interpretation of the award.¹⁶² The compromis may also indicate that the award as rendered should be made public on the date agreed by the parties.¹⁶³

195. The last stage of arbitration is the execution of the arbitral award. Depending upon the nature of the dispute in question, parties may include in the compromis the necessary steps to be taken towards the execution of the award. For example, in a boundary dispute, the parties may agree to establish another commission or appoint experts to designate the boundary once the award is rendered. According to the 1907 Hague Convention, any dispute that may arise between the parties concerning the interpretation or execution of the award shall, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, be submitted to the arbitral tribunal which pronounced it.¹⁶⁴

G. Judicial settlement

1. Main characteristics, legal framework and functions

196. States parties to a dispute may seek a solution by submitting the dispute to a pre-constituted international court or tribunal composed of independent judges whose tasks are to settle claims on the basis of international law and render decisions which are binding upon the parties. This method is generally referred to as judicial settlement, which constitutes one of the means of the peaceful settlement of international disputes set out in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations.

197. The first international court of a world-wide scale was the Permanent Court of International Justice, which was created by the Covenant of the League of Nations in 1922. It was succeeded by the International Court of Justice, established in 1946 as a principal organ of the United Nations. Under Article 36 of its Statute, the International Court of Justice has general jurisdiction in "all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force." Another international institution for judicial settlement is the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, provided for under the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,¹⁶⁵ with jurisdiction over law of the sea disputes.

198. Both judicial settlement and arbitration make recourse to an independent judicial body to obtain binding decisions, as pointed out in the previous section. Arbitral tribunals, however, are essentially of an ad hoc nature, and are composed of judges selected on the basis of parity by the parties to a dispute who also determine the procedural rules and the law applicable to the case concerned. International courts and tribunals, by contrast, are pre-constituted inasmuch as they are permanent judicial organs whose composition, jurisdictional competence and procedural rules are pre-determined by their constitutive treaties. Furthermore, judicial settlement may be distinguished from arbitration in that the decisions of international courts and tribunals are, as a rule, not appealable. The Statute of the International Court of Justice provides in its Article 60 that "the judgment [of the Court] is final and without appeal".¹⁶⁶ The only exceptions to the rule concern questions of scope or execution of the judgment, which may be subject to further decisions, though of the same court. Thus, Article 60 of the ICJ Statute provides further that "in the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party”.¹⁶⁷ The degree of finality of decisions of arbitral tribunals, on the other hand, depends on what is specifically agreed upon in a compromis, which may provide for the possibility of decisions being subject to an appeal before international courts.¹⁶⁸

¹⁶⁵Article 287 (1) (a) and annex VI, article 1 (1). The Tribunal, as well as its Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber, having jurisdiction in disputes with respect to activities in the Area, is to be established upon entry into force of the Convention.

¹⁶⁶Similar provisions are found in article 52 of the 1950 European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 213, p. 221), article 67 of the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights (International Legal Materials, vol. IX, p. 673) and article 296 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (United Nations publication, Sales No. E.83.V.5), p. 101.

199. It may also be pointed out that because international courts or tribunals are pre-constituted institutions, they are ipso facto better suited than ad hoc arbitral tribunals—which take longer to constitute—to deal with urgent matters such as requests for interim (provisional) measures of protection.¹⁶⁹ Moreover, owing to the same characteristic as permanent institution, an international court such as the International Court of Justice appears to be better suited for developing uniform jurisprudence of international law than ad hoc arbitral tribunals. Such jurisprudence is developed by the courts while exercising jurisdiction on contentious cases between States,¹⁷⁰ or advisory jurisdiction on legal questions referred to it by an international organization and relating to disputes between States, between States and international organizations and those between international organizations.¹⁷¹ As the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, the International Court of Justice has also a quasi-appellate jurisdiction for the decisions of administrative tribunals established within the

201. Further examples of the type of cases for which resort to judicial settlement is envisaged are also found in a number of regional treaties which established courts for the settlement of certain disputes. Thus, the European Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, created respectively by the European Convention on Human Rights of 4 November 1950, and the American Convention on Human Rights of 22 November 1969, have jurisdiction in matters relating to human rights violations in connection with the provisions of these agreements.¹⁸⁰ In the area of regional economic integration, the Convention of 25 March 1957 relating to Certain Institutions Common to the European Communities¹⁸¹ created the Court of Justice of the European Communities to exercise jurisdiction in matters concerning the European Coal and Steel Community, the European Economic Community and the European Atomic Energy Community. The Treaty concerning the Creation and the Statute of a Benelux Court of Justice of 31 March 1965¹⁸² confers upon the Court jurisdiction over questions of interpretation regarding rules of law common to the Benelux countries (e.g., treaty provisions or decisions of the Committee of Ministers) for the purpose of ensuring uniform application of these rules by their national courts or by the Benelux Arbitral College. The Treaty Creating the Court of Justice of the Cartagena Agreement of 28 May 1976¹⁸³ confers upon the Court jurisdiction in matters relating to the interpretation and application of the Agreement of Sub-regional Integration of the Andean Group of 21 May 1969¹⁸⁴ concluded by five members of the Latin American Free Trade Association (LAFTA). As regards the matter concerning the peaceful use of nuclear energy, the Convention on the Establishment of a Security Control in the Field of Nuclear Energy of 20 December 1957¹⁸⁵ established the European Nuclear Energy Tribunal before which decisions of the European Nuclear Energy Agency concerning the scope of security controls can be appealed by States parties to the Convention or by affected enterprises. On the question of State immunities, the Additional Protocol to the European Convention on State Immunity of 16 May 1972¹⁸⁶ created the European Tribunal for the purpose of determining cases concerning alleged breach of the rules of State immunity contained in the Convention.

3. Institutional and procedural aspects

(a) Jurisdiction, competence and initiation of the process

202. Settlement of international disputes by international courts is subject to the recognition by the States concerned of the jurisdiction of the courts over such disputes.¹⁸⁷ The recognition may be expressed by way of a special agreement between the States parties to a dispute (compromis) conferring jurisdiction upon a court in a particular dispute, or by a compromissory clause providing for agreed or unilateral reference of a dispute to a court, or by other means. In the event of a dispute as to whether a court has jurisdiction, the matter is settled by the decision of the court.¹⁸⁸ For example, the court may rule on questions of competence or other substantive preliminary objections that can be raised by a respondent

State,¹⁸⁹ and also those relating to procedural preliminary objections under the rule of exhaustion of local remedies.¹⁹⁰

(i) Special agreement

203. Article 36, paragraph 1, of the Statute of the International Court of Justice provides that the “jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it”, which is done normally by way of notification to the Registry of a special agreement (compromis) concluded by the parties for that purpose. The Special Agreement of 23 May 1976 concerning the Delimitation of the Continental Shelf (Libya/Malta), for example, provides:

“The Government of the Republic of Malta and the Government of the Libyan Arab Republic agree to recourse to the International Court of Justice as follows:

“Article I,

“The Court is requested to decide the following questions:

“What principles and rules of international law are applicable to the delimitation of the area of the continental shelf which appertains to the Republic of Malta and the area of continental shelf which appertains to the Libyan Arab Republic and how in practice such principles and rules can be applied by the two parties in this particular case in order that they may without difficulty delimit such areas by an agreement . . .”

204. By asking the Court to indicate also how, in practice, such principles and rules can be applied in the case, the Libya/Malta compromis went further than what had been requested in a special agreement on another delimitation case referred to the Court. In the North Sea Continental Shelf cases the special agreement of 2 February 1967 between Denmark and the Federal Republic of Germany, like the special agreement of the same date between the Netherlands and the Federal Republic of Germany, contained the provision set out below, requesting the Court to do no more than to rule on the principles applicable to the delimitation as between the Parties:

“(1) The International Court of Justice is requested to decide the following question: What principles and rules of international law are applicable to the delimitation as between the Parties of the areas of the continental shelf in the North Sea which appertain to each of them beyond the partial boundary determined by the above-mentioned Convention of 9 June 1965.

¹⁸⁹Objections to jurisdiction have been taken in the International Court of Justice on several grounds, such as: (a) that the instrument conferring jurisdiction is no longer in force; see, e.g., Temple of Preah Vihear (Cambodia v. Thailand), I.C.J. Reports 1961, p. 17; or not applicable (e.g., Aerial Incident of 10 March 1953 (United States v. Czechoslovakia), I.C.J. Reports 1956, p. 6); or the dispute is excluded by virtue of a reservation to the instrument (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States), I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 392); or (b) that the dispute is not admissible for reasons of jus standi (e.g., South West Africa (Ethiopia v. South Africa, Liberia v. South Africa), I.C.J. Reports 1962, p. 319); or non-exhaustion of local remedies (e.g., Interhandel (Switzerland v. United States), I.C.J. Reports 1957, p. 105); or non-existence of dispute (e.g., Rights of Passage over Indian Territory (Portugal v. India), I.C.J. Reports 1957, p. 125).

“(2) The Governments of the Kingdom of Denmark and of the Federal Republic of Germany shall delimit the continental shelf in the North Sea as between their countries by agreement in pursuance of the decision requested from the International Court of Justice.”

(ii) Compromissory clause in treaties

205. Article 36, paragraph 1, of the Statute of the Court provides also that the jurisdiction of the Court comprises “all matters specially provided for . . . in treaties and conventions in force”. There are numerous treaties containing such a compromissory clause,¹⁹¹ some of which provide for unilateral reference of all or certain categories of disputes to the International Court of Justice. At the global level, for example, under the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes of 26 September 1928 and 28 April 1949¹⁹² all legal disputes are subject to compulsory adjudication by the Court, unless the parties agree to submit them to arbitration or conciliation.¹⁹³ The Optional Protocol of Signature concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes adopted by the 1958 United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea¹⁹⁴ provides that disputes arising from the interpretation or application of any 1958 Convention on the Law of the Sea shall lie within the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. The Optional Protocol to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes of 18 April 1961¹⁹⁵ also provides for the jurisdiction of the Court over disputes arising from the interpretation or application of the Convention, unless the parties within a specified period of time agree to submit them to arbitration. Similarly, the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969¹⁹⁶ confers jurisdiction upon the Court for disputes concerning the application or interpretation of articles 53 and 64 relating to conflicts of treaties with jus cogens, unless they are submitted to an ad hoc arbitration by common agreement of the parties.

206. At the regional level, of special interest is the European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes of 29 April 1957, which provides for the submission of all international legal disputes to the International Court of Justice.¹⁹⁷ Similar provisions are found also in the American Treaty on Pacific Settlement (Pact of Bogotá) of 30 April 1948.¹⁹⁸

(iii) Other means of conferring jurisdiction

207. With respect to the International Court of Justice, States parties to the Statute of the Court have the option of making a declaration under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute by which they accept in advance the jurisdic-

States are bound by this declaration only with respect to States which have also made such a declaration. The declaration may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain States, or for a certain time. Optional clauses of compulsory jurisdiction also exist with respect to the European Court of Human Rights¹⁹⁹ and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.²⁰⁰

208. By contrast, other treaties establishing an international court automatically confer jurisdiction to that court with respect to its scope of activities. The States parties do not need and do not have the option to make a declaration of acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of that court. Thus, by becoming a party to the Treaties establishing the European Communities, member States automatically subject themselves to the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities for disputes connected with the application and interpretation of the Treaties.²⁰¹ States parties to the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea ipso facto accept the compulsory jurisdiction of various forums for the settlement of law of the sea disputes.²⁰² However, under the Convention, States parties have to make a declaration on the choice of the forum for judicial settlement established thereunder.²⁰³

(iv) Initiation of process

209. Contentious proceedings before international courts are instituted either unilaterally by one of the parties to a dispute or jointly by the parties, depending upon the terms of the relevant agreement in force between them.²⁰⁴ Thus, if under the agreement the parties have accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in respect of the dispute, then proceedings may be instituted unilaterally by the applicant State. In the absence of such a prior acceptance, however, proceedings can only be brought before international courts on the basis of the mutual consent of the parties.

²⁰³Articles 286 and 287.

²⁰⁴In some regional courts, cases may be brought to them by entities other than States (e.g., the European Commission of Human Rights with respect to the European Court of Human Rights; the Council or the Commission with respect to the Court of Justice of the European Communities; the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights with respect to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights) or even by individuals (e.g., the Court of Justice of the European Communities). However, as far as disputes between States are concerned, access to the court is generally confined to the States concerned.

210. The procedure for instituting contentious proceedings is defined in the basic statute of the respective international courts. The Statute of the International Court of Justice provides under Article 40 as follows:

“1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.

“2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.

“3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other States entitled to appear before the Court.”

211. A special agreement may be concluded ad hoc, after the dispute has arisen, or it may be reached in accordance with provisions relating to the settlement of disputes in existing international treaties in force between the parties.²⁰⁵ In filing an application the parties may request, in accordance with the terms of the relevant agreement, that the case be brought to a special or ad hoc chamber consisting of a limited number of the members of the court concerned.²⁰⁶ Examples of these include the chamber of summary procedure²⁰⁷ and ad hoc chambers²⁰⁸ of the International Court of Justice and the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber²⁰⁹ and special chambers²¹⁰ of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. Resort to an ad hoc chamber of the International Court of Justice is a fairly recent phenomenon, as the provisions of Article 26, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court were not invoked until 1981.²¹¹ Since then, however, three out of eight contentious cases have been referred to ad hoc chambers.²¹²

²⁰⁵ An example of special agreements concluded on the basis of a compromissory clause in existing international treaties is the Special Agreement concerning the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, the preamble of which reads, inter alia:

“Bearing in mind the obligation assumed by [the parties] under Articles 1 and 28 of the European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes of 29 April 1957 to submit to the judgment of the International Court all international controversies to the extent that no special arrangement has been or will be made . . .”

(v) Advisory opinions

212. International courts may be empowered to give an advisory opinion on a legal question relating to an existing international dispute between States referred to them by an international entity.²¹³ The opinion does not bind the requesting entity, or any other body, or any State. Nevertheless, procedure in advisory cases, as in contentious cases, involves elaborate written and oral proceedings in accordance with the predetermined rules of the court in question, and as such advisory opinions could assume the character of judicial pronouncements which, while not binding, might entail practical consequences for the bodies concerned.

(b) Access and third-party intervention

213. A State not party to a legal instrument establishing an international court is normally denied access to it. In the case of the International Court of Justice, however, States not party to the Charter of the United Nations may, by virtue of Article 93, paragraph 2, of the Charter, become party to the Statute of the Court on conditions to be determined by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The Statute of the Court further provides under its Article 35, paragraph 2, that other States may have access to the Court in compliance with the conditions laid down by the Security Council and subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force.²¹⁴

214. A third State may submit a request to be permitted to intervene in the proceedings if it considers that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case.²¹⁵ Provisions for such proceedings are found in the respective statutes and rules of international courts or tribunals, such as the International Court of Justice,²¹⁶ the International ²¹³E.g., Permanent Court of International Justice (Covenant of the League of Nations, Article 14); International Court of Justice (Charter of the United Nations, Article 96; Statute of the Court, Article 65); European Court of Human Rights (Protocol No. 2 to the European Convention on Human Rights). In the case of the International Court of Justice, the General Assembly has requested 13 advisory opinions of the Court, some of which were related to existing disputes between States, for example: International Status of South West Africa (1949) (a dispute between the Union of South Africa and certain members of the United Nations relating to its application of the mandate to South West Africa); Western Sahara (1975). The Security Council also requested an advisory opinion of the Court concerning the legal consequences for States of the continuing presence of South Africa in Namibia notwithstanding Security Council resolution 276 (1970) of 30 January 1970. The Economic and Social Council also requested an advisory opinion of the Court concerning the question of the applicability of article VI, section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations in the case of Dumitru Mazilu as Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. ICJ gave its advisory opinion on the question on 15 December 1989 (see E/1990/15/Add.1 and I.C.J. Reports 1989, p. 177).

Tribunal for the Law of the Sea²¹⁷ and the Court of Justice of the European Communities.²¹⁸

(c) Composition

215. In the various multilateral treaties establishing international courts, provisions are made for the composition of the court in question and the selection of judges. The size of the actual body varies in accordance with the terms of each instrument—for example, from 21 members constituting the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, to 15 members in the case of the International Court of Justice, to 9 members in respect of the Benelux Court of Justice.²¹⁹ In the case of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, each Member State of the European Communities is attributed a seat on the bench, whereas both the International Court of Justice and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea are composed of “independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality”, which as a whole should represent “the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world”.²²⁰ The composition of all other international courts is based on either of these two basic alternatives.

216. The selection procedure is generally provided in the statute of the court concerned. The judges may be appointed by common agreement of member States, as provided for the Court of Justice of the European Communities,²²¹ or elected by one or more political organs, e.g., the General Assembly and the Security Council of the United Nations in the case of the International Court of Justice,²²² or the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe for the European Court of Human Rights.²²³ In addition, a party to a dispute may appoint an ad hoc judge of its nationality if the court concerned does not include upon the bench a judge of that nationality.²²⁴ The judges are selected in their individual capacities strictly on the basis of legal qualifications. The terms of the judges are, for example, nine years as regards the International Court of Justice, with one third of the bench elected every three years.²²⁵ No more than one national of any State may be a member of the Court.²²⁶

²²⁶*Ibid.*, Article 3.

217. The composition of an international court and the selection of its judges thus are not, except for ad hoc judges, dependent upon the wishes of the parties to a dispute. Possibilities exist, however, for the views of the litigant States to be reflected in this matter with respect to the disputes concerning sea-bed activities in the Area. The 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea provides in its annex VI, article 15, paragraph 2, that such disputes may be submitted to a special chamber of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea to be established at the request of the parties, the composition of which is to be determined by the Tribunal with the approval of the parties. In the case of an ad hoc chamber of the International Court of Justice constituted under Article 26, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court, while the number of the judges of the chamber is determined with the approval of the parties, the selection itself is left to the decision of the Court.²²⁷ However, the parties to a dispute, by way of special agreement, may request to be consulted on the selection. Furthermore, judges of the nationality of each of the parties may, under Article 31 of the Statute, retain their right to sit in the case before the Court or the chamber.²²⁸ Article I of the Special Agreement of 29 March 1979²²⁹ concerning the Delimitation of the Maritime Boundary in the Gulf of Maine Area thus stipulated as follows:

"1. The Parties shall submit the question posed in Article II to a Chamber of the International Court of Justice constituted pursuant to Article 26 (2) and Article 31 of the Statute of the Court and in accordance with this Special Agreement.

"2. The Chamber shall be composed of five persons, three of whom shall be elected by and from the Members of the Court, after consultation with the Parties, and two of whom shall be judges ad hoc, who shall not be nationals of either Party, chosen by the Parties."²³⁰

(d) Rules of procedure

218. Rules of procedure governing the proceedings for the judicial settlement of international disputes are found in the basic statute of the international court or tribunal concerned, and by the supplementary rules adopted by it, which determine such technical requirements as the official languages, the structure and phases of the proceedings and the contents and delivery of the decision. The official languages of the International Court of Justice are English and French.²³¹ All communications and documents relating to cases submitted to the Court are channelled through the Registrar.²³²

219. In contentious cases, the party at the time of filing a document instituting proceedings informs the competent court of the name of the agent who will be its representative in the proceedings; the other party then appoints its agent as soon as possible.²³³ The proceedings in contentious cases are usually divided into a written and an oral phase. The written phase normally comprises the filing of pleadings with a time-limit fixed by the court, the pleadings are generally confined to a statement of the case (memorial) and a defence (counter-memorial) and, if necessary, a reply and a rejoinder,²³⁴ together with papers and documents in support.²³⁵ Depending upon the procedure agreed upon by the parties or regulated by the rules of the court; these pleadings may be filed simultaneously by both parties or, alternatively, each party replying to the other.²³⁶ The number and the order of filing of the pleadings are determined in the orders of the court²³⁷ or on the basis of a special agreement. Written pleadings should contain a full statement of the facts considered relevant by the party and of its arguments as to the law.²³⁸

220. The oral phase begins at the closure of the written proceedings. In principle, oral proceedings are held in public, unless it is otherwise decided under specific circumstances.²³⁹ The parties may address the court only through their agents, counsel or advocates. In the course of the oral proceedings, witnesses and experts may be called upon by the parties or by the court to give evidence or clarify any aspects of the matters in issue. If a party fails to appear before the court in the oral proceedings or fails to defend its case, the opposing party may request a decision in favour of its final claims.²⁴⁰ In the Statute of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, the opposing party may request the Tribunal only to continue the proceedings and to make its decision.²⁴¹

221. Subsequent to the closure of the oral proceedings, the court examines the factual and legal foundations of the claim. Specific instructions as to the applicable law are contained in its statute or in a special agreement for the claim. Because of the nature of international disputes, the primary source of law is to be found in international law. Article 38, paragraph 1, of the Statute of the International Court of Justice provides:

“The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:

- a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting States;
- b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
- c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
- d. . . . judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.”

However, the deciding of the case according to other legal norms or on the basis of ex aequo et bono is not precluded, if the parties agree to such a solution.²⁴² The deliberations of the court are kept private and secret.²⁴³

222. The rules governing the procedure for reaching a decision are fixed by the court. Its decision is made by a majority of the votes of the judges present, with a casting vote to be given by the president or by the judge acting in his place, in the event of equality of votes for and against.²⁴⁴ The decision should state the reasons on which it is based and should be framed within the scope of the claims made by the parties. A judge whose views on the matter differ either in whole or in part may deliver an individual opinion along with the judgement, which could be expressed in the form of a “separate opinion”, if disagreement of the judge is concerned with the reasons on which a judgement is based, or in the form of a “dissenting opinion”, if disagreement is with the holding in the judgement itself.

223. As regards advisory proceedings, the rules governing the procedure of contentious proceedings generally apply,²⁴⁵ subject to special rules provided for them.²⁴⁶

224. The basic statutes and procedural rules of international courts or tribunals do not provide for any specific duration within which a case should be decided, though certain dates and time-limits are determined as orders by the court seized with the case with regard to the filing of pleadings, the submission by the parties of memorials, counter-memorials and, as the case may be, replies as well as the papers and documents in support, and the time in which each party must conclude its arguments.

(e) Seat and administrative aspects

225. The seat of international courts and tribunals is established in accordance with their basic statutes and procedural rules. In the case of the International Court of Justice, its seat is established at The Hague. This, however, does not prevent the Court from acting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable to do so.²⁴⁷

226. The judges comprising international courts or tribunals elect from their members a president,²⁴⁸ a vice-president²⁴⁹ and presidents of chambers²⁵⁰ for a specified term of office. The president directs the judicial business and the administration of the court and presides at all meetings of the court.²⁵¹

227. The administrative functions of international courts are carried out by a secretariat established for this purpose generally known as the registry.²⁵² The executive head of the registry, the registrar, is appointed by the competent court for a specified term of office, e.g., seven years in the case of the International Court of Justice.²⁵³ The functions of the registrar are defined by the rules of court,²⁵⁴ which include, as its main function relating to cases before the court, the execution of all communications, notifications and transmission of documents to the court and to the disputants.

(f) Expenses and other financial arrangements

228. The basic statutes and procedural rules of international courts or tribunals determine the means for covering the expenses involved in the settling of claims. In principle, the expenses of the functioning of these courts or tribunals are borne by their member States on a regular basis. It is thus provided that the expenses of the International Court of Justice, including amounts payable to witnesses or experts appearing at the insistence of the Court, are borne out of the United Nations budget.²⁵⁵ If a party to a case does not contribute to the United Nations budget, the Court itself fixes the amount payable by that party as a contribution towards the expenses of the Court for the case. Each party bears its own costs of the preparation and presentation of its claims, such as counsel's fees, printing costs and travel expenses,²⁵⁶ unless the Court makes an order in favour of a party for the payment of the costs by the other party²⁵⁷ or unless a party qualifies to receive financial assistance from the Trust Fund established by the Secretary-General of the United Nations in 1989 to assist States in the settlement of disputes through the International Court of Justice.

4. Outcome of judicial settlement

229. The outcomes of contentious proceedings involving international disputes are decisions which are final and binding on the parties. In a majority of cases, the judgements are those requiring performance, but as has been done in some of the judgments of the International Court of Justice, a court may be requested to render declaratory judgements in which the court determines the guiding legal principles to be followed in dealing with a particular dispute, without giving a definitive decision on the dispute,²⁵⁸ or establishes that the violation of the principle of international law in question has no practical remedy.²⁵⁹ The judgements pertaining to interim proceedings, such as those for provisional measures of protection, preliminary rulings or objections, and intervention by a third-party State, are also binding upon the parties.

H. Resort to regional agencies or arrangements

1. Main characteristics, legal framework and relation to other means of peaceful settlement provided for by Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations

230. Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations mentions “resort to regional agencies or arrangements” among the peaceful means by which States parties to a dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall seek a solution to the dispute.

231. Further to their being mentioned in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations, regional agencies or arrangements are dealt with in Chapter VIII of the Charter, and, more specifically, as regards peaceful settlement of disputes, in Article 52 thereof.

232. Article 52 refers to both “regional arrangements” and “regional agencies”. The term “regional arrangements” denotes agreements (regional multilateral treaties) under which States of a region undertake to regulate their relations with respect to the question of the settlement of disputes, without creating thereunder a permanent institution or a regional international organization with international legal personality.²⁶⁰ The term “regional agencies”, by contrast, refers to regional international organizations created by regional multilateral treaties under a permanent institution with international legal personality to perform broader functions in the field of the maintenance of peace and security, including the settlement of disputes.²⁶¹

²⁶¹See, e.g., the League of Arab States created under the Pact, signed at Cairo on 22 March 1945, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 70, p. 237; the Organization of American States (OAS) established under the Charter, signed at Bogotá on 30 April 1948 (the Bogotá Charter), ibid., vol. 119, p. 3, as amended by the Protocol of Buenos Aires, signed on 27 February 1967, ibid., vol. 721, p. 264, at p. 324, and by the Protocol of Cartagena de Indias signed on 5 December 1985, *O.A.S. 233. The words “regional agencies or arrangements” may also be applied, in an extensive manner, to agreements of a more specific subject-matter, namely, systems created by some regions of the world for the development of some very specific areas of international law such as the protection of human rights,²⁶² economic integration²⁶³ and shared resources management.²⁶⁴ These regional agreements may provide for specific means of peaceful settlement of disputes arising between States parties to those agreements, disputes which concern the interpretation and/or application of, or compliance with, their provisions.

234. Regional agencies or arrangements deal with most of the means of peaceful settlement of disputes under Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations and provide for the technical aspects of the resort to such means.

235. Those regional agencies aimed at performing wide functions in the field of the maintenance of international peace and security²⁶⁵ have their own mechanisms for the peaceful settlement of disputes, either by reference to negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, judicial settlement and arbitration or by endowing permanent organs with specific functions for this purpose.²⁶⁶

236. As far as regional agencies devoted to performing functions in specific areas are concerned,²⁶⁷ it should be mentioned that their constituent instruments also include provisions concerning the peaceful settlement of disputes arising in connection with the interpretation or application of their provisions. Moreover, some of these regional agencies, particularly those created for the protection of human rights²⁶⁸ and those intended to achieve economic integration,²⁶⁹ have set up bodies of third-party settlement, such as judicial tribunals.

²⁶⁹See, e.g., article 3 of the 1957 Convention relating to certain institutions common to the European Communities, signed at Rome on 25 March 1957, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 294, p. 411.

237. The inclusion of resort to regional agencies or arrangements among the means of peaceful settlement of disputes under Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations was to give the Member States the option to apply any of the enumerated peaceful means in a regional setting or forum. Thus, the settlement of disputes through regional agencies or arrangements relies upon the free choice of those specific means (negotiation, inquiry, good offices, mediation, conciliation, arbitration and judicial settlement) by the parties to a local dispute, invoking first the settlement procedures as established under the regional instrument in question, as envisaged in Article 52 of the Charter.

2. Institutional arrangements, competence and procedure

238. Paragraphs 239-271, below, provide examples and a brief description of procedures involved in the peaceful settlement of disputes in various regional arrangements or agencies, particularly as regards the competence of the organs concerned and the initiation of process. Section 3 which follows, on the other hand, concentrates on some examples of dispute settlement in which various regional arrangements or agencies have been involved. To the extent that some institutional aspects contained in the present section may be illustrated by means of the examples of dispute settlement described in section 3, the appropriate cross-references are also made.

(a) League of Arab States

239. Article 5 of the League Pact provides for an arbitral role for the Council of the League, which is composed of representatives of all member States.²⁷⁰ If a dispute between two contending members of the League does not involve the independence, sovereignty or territorial integrity of a State and those members apply to the League Council for the settlement of their dispute, the decisions of the League Council shall be effective and obligatory.²⁷¹ The exercise of the Council's functions as an organ of arbitration is therefore subject to two conditions: (a) party submission and (b) subject-matter limitations. When the Council acts in its arbitral capacity, the States among which the dispute has arisen shall not participate in the deliberations and decisions of the Council.²⁷² The League Pact also provides that the Council shall mediate, in a dispute which may lead to war between two member States or between a member State and another State, in order to conciliate them.²⁷³ The exercise of these functions of good offices, mediation and conciliation does not depend upon the submission of the dispute by the parties.

240. In practice, the Council has applied the modes of good offices, mediation and conciliation to all disputes, whether peace-threatening or not.

²⁷⁰Pact of the League, article 3; see note 261 supra.

²⁷²*Ibid.*, second paragraph.

While in some cases it has done so directly, in other cases it has set up subsidiary bodies to carry out these functions.²⁷⁴

241. It is also to be noted that while the Pact of the League does not expressly provide for the participation of its Secretary-General in the process of the peaceful settlement of disputes, the Council, through internal regulations, has developed an active role for the Secretary-General in this connection. Often the Council has included the Secretary-General of the League in the special bodies it has created for its mediation and fact-finding missions.²⁷⁵

(b) Organization of American States

242. Chapter VI (arts. 23 to 26) of the OAS Charter deals specifically with the peaceful settlement of disputes. Article 23, as amended by the 1985 Protocol of Cartagena de Indias, provides that international disputes which may arise between American States shall be submitted to the peaceful procedures set forth in the OAS Charter, although that should not be interpreted as an impairment of the rights and obligations of the member States under Articles 34 and 35 of the Charter of the United Nations. Specific mention is made in the Bogotá Charter of direct negotiation, good offices, mediation, investigation and conciliation, judicial settlement and arbitration as well as other means of the choice of the parties to the dispute. Article 26 contains an express reference to a special treaty establishing adequate procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes and the means for their application. This is the American Treaty on Pacific Settlement ("Pact of Bogotá") of 30 April 1948, which contains a detailed provision of the above-mentioned procedures in addition to certain general principles regarding the peaceful settlement of disputes between American States.²⁷⁶

243. It is also to be noted that, as amended in 1970, and again in 1985, the OAS Charter endows the Permanent Council of the organization, composed of one representative of each member State, with functions in the field of peaceful settlement.²⁷⁷ The exercise of these functions may be initiated by any party to a dispute in which none of the peaceful procedures provided for in the OAS Charter is under way. If any or all of the parties to a dispute request the good offices of the Council the latter shall assist the parties and recommend the procedures it considers suitable for the peaceful settlement of the dispute. In the exercise of these functions the Council, with the consent of the Governments concerned, may resort to fact-finding activities in the territory of one or more parties to the dispute. It also may, with the consent of the parties to the dispute, establish ad hoc committees with a membership and mandate also to be agreed to by the parties.²⁷⁸

²⁷⁶See articles 24 and 26 of the OAS Charter as well as notes 34 and 260 above. See also paragraph 277 below on the application of the Pact of Bogotá.

²⁷⁷Articles 82 to 90 of the OAS Charter. See also paragraph 273 below for an example of Council involvement in peaceful settlement.

²⁷⁸For an example of such ad hoc committees, see paragraph 273 below.

244. Furthermore, article 87 of the OAS Charter, as amended in 1985, provides that if the procedure for the peaceful settlement of disputes recommended by the Permanent Council or suggested by the pertinent ad hoc committee under the terms of its mandate is not accepted by one of the parties, or one of the parties declares that the procedure has not settled the dispute, the Permanent Council shall so inform the General Assembly, without prejudice to its taking steps to secure agreement between the parties or to restore relations between them.

245. As for the role of the OAS Secretary-General himself, the adoption in 1985 of the Protocol of Amendment to the OAS Charter which gives him powers similar to those conferred on the Secretary-General of the United Nations by Article 99 of the Charter of the United Nations²⁷⁹ seems to have paved the way towards the expansion of his powers in the area of peaceful settlement.²⁸⁰

(c) Organization of African Unity

246. Article XIX of the OAU Charter lays down the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes and provides for the establishment of a commission of mediation, conciliation and arbitration, whose composition and conditions of service shall be defined by a separate protocol to be regarded as an integral part of the Charter. The said Protocol was signed at Cairo on 21 July 1964 and contains detailed provisions on the establishment and organization of the Commission, on general principles and on the procedures to be followed in cases of mediation, conciliation and arbitration.²⁸¹

247. A dispute may be referred to the Commission jointly by the parties concerned, by a party to the dispute, by the Council of Ministers or by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government.²⁸² If a dispute has been referred to the Commission and one or more of the parties have refused to submit to the jurisdiction of the Commission, the Bureau refers the matter to the Council of Ministers for consideration. On the other hand, the consent of the party may be expressed by a prior agreement, by an ad hoc submission of the dispute or by the acceptance of the other party's or the Council's or Assembly's submission of the dispute to the Commission's jurisdiction. The Commission is endowed with powers of investigation or inquiry with regard to disputes submitted to it.²⁸³

248. In accordance with the Protocol, the parties to a dispute may agree to resort to any one of the following modes of settlement: mediation, conciliation or arbitration.²⁸⁴ These three modes are alternative—and not necessarily successive—procedures, and parties are free to use any one or all three in respect of a dispute.

²⁸¹The Commission consists of 21 members of different nationalities elected by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government for a period of five years. For text of the 1964 Cairo Protocol, see International Legal Materials, vol. III (1964), p. 1116.

²⁸³*Ibid.*, articles XIV and XVIII.

²⁸⁴*Ibid.*, article XIX.

249. In 1977, the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, with a view to rendering the Commission more flexible and more apt to respond to the urgencies of intra-African disputes, decided to suspend the election of the Commission's members and provisionally appoint an ad hoc Committee composed of nine States plus three other possible members to be appointed by the OAU Chairman.²⁸⁵

250. While the possibility always exists for OAU to reactivate the Commission or the ad hoc Committee discussed above, in practice OAU has had recourse to other procedures in a number of peaceful settlement of disputes issues in which it has been involved. It has done so through the Council of Ministers and the Assembly of Heads of State and Government and through the creation of special or ad hoc committees other than the one mentioned in paragraph 249 above. It has also used the good offices of some African statesmen.²⁸⁶

(d) European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes (Council of Europe)

251. The 1957 European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes²⁸⁷ is based on the distinction between legal disputes, as defined in Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, and other (non-legal) disputes. With regard to legal disputes, the parties to the Convention undertake to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice.²⁸⁸ This notwithstanding, the parties to a legal dispute may agree to resort to the procedure of conciliation before submitting the dispute to the International Court of Justice.²⁸⁹

252. With regard to non-legal disputes (i.e., disputes other than those enumerated in Article 36, paragraph 2, of the ICJ Statute), the following means of settlement are provided by the European Convention: (a) conciliation, unless the parties to such a dispute agree to submit it to an arbitral tribunal without prior recourse to conciliation;²⁹⁰ and (b) arbitration, for all non-legal disputes which have not been settled by conciliation either because the parties have agreed not to have prior recourse to it or because conciliation has failed.²⁹¹

253. While it is not possible, under the terms of the Convention, for a party thereto not to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice with regard to legal disputes, the Convention permits that on depositing its instrument of ratification a party may declare that it will not be bound by the provisions concerning arbitration or those concerning both arbitration and conciliation.²⁹² Some States have chosen to submit such reservations.

254. Furthermore, if the parties to a dispute agree to submit a dispute to another procedure of peaceful settlement, the provisions of the Convention do not apply. The only restriction in this connection is that in respect of legal disputes the parties shall refrain from invoking, as between themselves, agreements which do not provide for a procedure entailing binding decisions.²⁹³

(e) Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE)

255. In accordance with provisions contained in the 1975 Helsinki Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE),²⁹⁴ and subsequent relevant documents, such as the 1990 Charter of Paris for a New Europe²⁹⁵ and the 1991 Valletta Report of the CSCE Meeting of Experts on Peaceful Settlement of Disputes,²⁹⁶ participating States will endeavour to reach a peaceful, rapid and equitable solution of disputes among them, on the basis of international law, by means such as negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement or other peaceful means of their own choice, including any settlement procedure agreed to in advance of disputes to which they are parties.²⁹⁷

256. If the parties are unable, within a reasonable period of time, to settle the dispute by direct consultation or negotiation, or to agree upon an appropriate procedure, any party to the dispute may request the establishment of a CSCE Dispute Settlement Mechanism by notifying the other party or parties to the dispute.²⁹⁸ The parties to the dispute have a large measure of participation in the selection of members of the Mechanism, enjoying the right to reject several proposed members. However, the relevant provisions also ensure that individual rejections by parties to the dispute or the failure by any party to make a pronouncement on the nominations shall not prevent in the end the establishment of a Mechanism.²⁹⁹

257. Once established, the Mechanism will seek such information and comments from the parties as will enable it to assist the parties in identifying suitable procedures for the settlement of the dispute. The Mechanism may offer general or specific comments or advice relating to the inception or resumption of a process of negotiation among the parties, or to the adoption of any other dispute settlement procedure in relation to the circumstances of the dispute or to any aspect of any such procedure. If the parties so agree, they may entrust the Mechanism with fact-finding or expert functions as well as with binding powers regarding the partial or total settlement of the dispute.³⁰⁰

258. In three specific instances, the system set up by the CSCE contemplates the intervention of another organ, namely, the Committee of Senior Officials,³⁰¹ in the settlement of a dispute:

(a) If, after considering in good faith and in a spirit of cooperation the advice and comment of the Mechanism, the parties are unable, within a reasonable time, to settle the dispute, any party to the dispute may so notify the Mechanism and the other party, whereupon any party may bring that circumstance to the attention of the Committee of Senior Officials.³⁰²

(b) Notwithstanding a request by a party to the dispute, the Mechanism will not be established or continued if another party considers that because the dispute raises issues concerning its territorial integrity, or national defence, title to sovereignty over land-territory, or competing claims with regard to the jurisdiction over other areas, the Mechanism should not be established or continued. In that case, any other party to the dispute may bring that circumstance to the attention of the Committee of Senior Officials.³⁰³

(c) In the case of a dispute of importance to peace, security or stability among the participating States in CSCE, any party to the dispute may bring it before the Committee of Senior Officials, without prejudice to the right of any participating State to raise an issue within the CSCE process.³⁰⁴

(f) European and inter-American systems for the protection of human rights

259. As the 1950 Rome Convention has been an important source of inspiration for the 1969 Pact of San José,³⁰⁵ it may be appropriate to examine both systems together, indicating their similarities and differences. Both conventions create a procedural first stage involving organs with functions of mediation and conciliation (European Commission of Human Rights³⁰⁶ and Inter-American Commission,³⁰⁷ respectively) and a possible second stage involving judicial organs (European Court of Human Rights³⁰⁸ and Inter-American Court of Human ³⁰⁶The European Commission consists of a number of members equal to that of States parties to the Convention; they are elected for a period of six years by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe.

³⁰⁷The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights is composed of seven members elected for a period of four years by the General Assembly of the organization.

³⁰⁸The European Court of Human Rights consists of a number of judges equal to that of the members of the Council of Europe elected for nine years by the Consultative Assembly of the Council.

Rights,³⁰⁹ respectively). The European Convention also contemplates the possible intervention of a political organ, the Committee of Ministers, with functions partly mediatory and conciliatory and partly judicial. Under both systems the applications or petitions, whether from States or individuals, must always be referred in the first place to the Commission.³¹⁰

260. In the practice of both systems so far, the cases of individuals bringing applications or communications alleging a breach of the Convention have been far more numerous than cases involving a State alleging the violation of Convention provisions by another State. The latter are the only true cases in which both regional systems may function as regional means for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States. In this connection, some differences between both systems are to be noted. Under the European Convention any State party may bring before the Commission a claim that another State party has violated the Convention (article 24). Under the Inter-American Convention, however, a special declaration is required from both the claimant and the defendant States whereby they recognize the competence of the Commission to receive and examine communications by which a State party alleges that another State party has committed a violation of a human right set forth in the Convention (article 45). Conversely, no special declaration is required under the Inter-American system for individuals to bring cases before the Commission alleging the violation of the Convention by a State (article 44), whereas under the European system a special declaration by the defendant State is required to have been made recognizing the Commission's competence in such cases (article 25).

261. Under the European system, when cases concerning human rights violations have been brought before the Commission by States rather than individuals, the procedure has, with one exception, ended up before the Committee of Ministers rather than the Court.³¹¹ This transpired, for instance, in the various cases concerning South Tyrol, Greece and Turkey.³¹²

262. The coming into functioning of the American system is relatively recent and its practice not yet very abundant. Apart from the exercise by the Inter-American Court of its consultative jurisdiction, which does not fall under the concept of "peaceful settlement of disputes between states",³¹³ only three contentious cases have been brought so far before the Court. They are all cases against the Government of Honduras and were submitted by the Inter-American Commission.

³¹¹If the European Commission fails in its conciliation functions and the Court is not in a position to take cognizance of the case, either because it lacks jurisdiction or because the case was not referred to it within a three-month deadline or for any other reason, the Committee of Ministers, after receiving a report submitted to it by the Commission, decides whether there has been a violation of the Convention. The parties to the Convention undertake to consider the Committee's decision as binding (1950 European Convention, article 32).

(g) African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights

263. Adopted under the aegis of the Organization of African Unity, the African Charter adopted at Banjul created the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights which may receive communications from States parties to the Charter alleging that another State party to the Charter has violated the Charter's provisions.³¹⁴ These communications may be made either after the failure of a period of direct negotiations between the States concerned on the possible settlement of the human rights dispute³¹⁵ or directly to the Commission.³¹⁶ The Commission may seek all relevant information from the States concerned and also has mediatory and conciliatory functions, trying all appropriate means to reach an amicable solution.³¹⁷ In cases of a series of serious or massive violations of human and peoples' rights, the Commission may also consider communications from States other than parties to the Charter.³¹⁸ In all cases the Commission draws up a report stating its factual findings and its recommendations, which it transmits to the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government.³¹⁹

(h) European Communities

264. As regards the settlement of disputes between members of the European Communities, the latter have undertaken not to submit a dispute concerning the interpretation or the implementation of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community of 25 March 1957 to any method of settlement other than those provided in the Treaty.³²⁰

265. Two organs are involved in the settlement of these disputes: (a) the Commission of the European Communities and (b) the Court of Justice.³²¹

266. If a member State considers that another member State has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Treaty establishing the Community, it must first bring the matter before the Commission.³²² The Commission shall deliver a reasoned opinion within three months but this opinion is not final.³²³ If the Commission does not meet its deadline or if the claimant party does not agree with the Commission's opinion or if the defendant party does not comply with the opinion, the matter may then be brought before the Court of Justice.³²⁴

267. The Court is thus competent to decide on cases in which a State member of the Community considers that another member State has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Treaty but it also has jurisdiction on any dispute between member States relating to the subject-matter of the Treaty if the dispute is submitted to it under a special agreement between the parties.³²⁵ If the Court finds that a member State has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Treaty, the State shall be required to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgement.³²⁶

(i) Economic Community of West Africa

268. As to disputes arising between members of the Economic Community of West Africa (ECOWAS), regarding the interpretation or application of the Treaty under which it was created,³²⁷ the latter provides that such disputes shall be amicably settled by direct agreement.³²⁸ Whenever such an amicable settlement is not possible, any party to the dispute may refer the matter to a Tribunal of the Community whose function will be to settle the dispute, through final decisions, ensuring the observance of law and justice in the interpretation of the provisions of the treaty.³²⁹

(j) Agreements on shared management of resources

269. Provisions on the peaceful settlement of disputes may also be found in some regional agreements of a multilateral nature concerning the shared management of resources.³³⁰ Thus, the 1963 Agreement on navigation and economic cooperation between the States of the Niger Basin provides that any dispute arising between the riparian States regarding the interpretation or application of the Agreement shall be amicably settled by direct agreement between them or through the intergovernmental organization contemplated in the Agreement. Failing such settlement, the dispute shall be decided by arbitration, in particular by the Commission of Mediation, Conciliation and Arbitration of the Organization of African Unity, or by judicial settlement by the International Court of Justice.³³¹

negotiation.³³² Failing this, the Convention contemplates arbitration, with a series of provisions regulating this procedure, including a special procedure for cases involving urgency.³³³

271. The 1959 Lake Inari Agreement provides that any dispute regarding the application of the agreement shall be settled by a mixed commission composed of two members appointed by each party to the agreement. If this procedure fails, the agreement contemplates the settlement of dispute through the diplomatic channel.³³⁴

3. Actual resort to regional agencies or arrangements in dispute settlement

272. International practice shows that regional agencies or arrangements have dealt with a number of disputes, applying the relevant provisions on peaceful settlement contained in their constituent instruments as well as principles derived from subsequent practice. Further to the previous section of the present chapter, which examined in some detail the institutional arrangements involved in the regional procedures, the following paragraphs will outline a brief account of actual disputes submitted by States to some of these regional procedures of peaceful settlement.

(a) League of Arab States

273. An example of intervention of the League Council as an arbitration organ is a 1949 dispute between Syria and Lebanon concerning extradition matters. After the Council intervention, the parties agreed to submit their dispute to the Governments of Saudi Arabia and Egypt for arbitration.³³⁵

274. As to the Council's functions of good offices, mediation and conciliation, the Council has considered that they also imply fact-finding activities and has appointed committees to that effect. Such was the case, for instance, in the 1958 Lebanon crisis, in which Lebanon complained to the League Council about acts of intervention of the United Arab Republic in the internal affairs of Lebanon, as well as in the 1962 Yemen situation of internal civil strife and, similarly, in the 1963 boundary dispute between Algeria and Morocco and in the 1972 border dispute between the Democratic People's Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic.³³⁶

275. Often the League Council has included the Secretary-General in the special bodies it has created for its mediation and fact-finding missions. Examples of the latter are the 1948 and 1962 Yemen situations of internal civil strife and the 1963 boundary dispute between Algeria and Morocco. In some cases the Council has vested in the Secretary-General alone the functions of offering good offices, as in the 1961 situation involving the secession of Syria from the United Arab Republic.³³⁷

276. As far as ad hoc mechanisms are concerned, it may be mentioned that, with regard to the recent Lebanese crisis, the Special Arab Summit of the League, held at Casablanca from 23 to 26 May 1989, decided to constitute a High Committee composed of the heads of State of Algeria, Morocco and Saudi Arabia. The High Committee was entrusted with the mission of promoting the convening of a meeting of the members of the Lebanese Parliament in order to discuss the adoption of political reforms, to proceed to the election of the President of the Republic and to constitute a Government of national unity.³³⁸

(b) Organization of American States

277. The Permanent Council may exercise a variety of functions, including good offices, inquiry and fact-finding at the request of one party to a dispute. The border conflict between Costa Rica and Nicaragua may be mentioned as an example of their application. As a result of serious incidents having taken place on the border between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, the Government of Costa Rica had recourse to the OAS Permanent Council, which by means of a resolution adopted on 7 June 1985³³⁹ requested the Governments of Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela to form a fact-finding committee, with the participation of the Secretary-General of OAS, to ascertain the events described by Costa Rica. After carrying out an on-site investigation, the committee reported to the Permanent Council. After considering the report,³⁴⁰ on 11 July 1985 the Permanent Council adopted a resolution in which it recommended to the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica that they proceed to start talks within the framework of the Contadora countries' negotiating process.³⁴¹ By the same resolution, the Permanent Council decided to consider that the committee's mandate was accomplished.

278. As for the role of the OAS Secretary-General, his functions further to that of participation in the above-mentioned fact-finding Committee may be noted. Thus, as regards the global situation in Central America, he has taken the initiative of submitting on 18 November 1986 an aide-mémoire to the Governments of the five Central American States (Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua) and the eight Governments making up the Contadora and Support Groups (Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Vene-

As a result of said initiative, the Contadora and Support Group States requested the participation of the two Secretaries-General (United Nations and OAS) in a visit to the capitals of the five Central American countries,³⁴² which took place in January 1987.

279. On 7 August 1987, the Presidents of the five Central American countries signed an agreement entitled "Procedure for the Establishment of a Firm and Lasting Peace in Central America", better known as the Esquipulas II Agreement,³⁴³ which established an International Verification and Follow-up Commission to be composed of the Foreign Ministers of the five Central American States and of the Contadora and Support Group States as well as the two Secretaries-General. Therefore, the OAS General Assembly, by a resolution adopted on 14 November 1987,³⁴⁴ authorized the Secretary-General of OAS to continue carrying out the functions he had been performing, namely, participation in the International Verification and Follow-up Commission, and also requested him to provide every assistance to the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve peace. The International Verification and Follow-up Commission met several times from August 1987 to January 1988 and reported to the signatories of the Esquipulas II Agreement on 14 January 1988.³⁴⁵

280. As part of the agreements reached at Tela, Honduras, on 7 August 1989, the five Central American States agreed on a Joint Plan for the Demobilization, Repatriation and Relocation of the Nicaraguan Resistance and Their Families, the execution of which will be placed under the supervision of an International Support and Verification Commission (CIAV) whose membership includes the Secretary-General of OAS.³⁴⁶ Furthermore, the Secretary-General of OAS, together with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, was requested by the indicated Plan to certify that it had been fully implemented.

281. As the Pact of Bogotá³⁴⁷ is envisaged by the OAS Charter (article 26) as the special treaty which will establish the adequate means for the settlement of disputes, contemplated in the OAS Charter, it is appropriate to mention here an example of the application of this treaty. It concerns the recent judgment by the International Court of Justice of 30 December 1988 on the case concerning Border and Transborder Armed Actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras). The Court concluded, as invoked by Nicaragua, that it had jurisdiction over the case under article XXXI of the Pact of Bogotá.³⁴⁸

(c) Organization of African Unity

282. Several examples may be given of ad hoc organs created either by the Council of Ministers or by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government in their efforts towards the peaceful settlement of disputes among African States. Thus, after armed incidents took place in October 1963 between Algeria and Morocco in connection with a disputed area of the Sahara, and following the personal intervention of some heads of State, an extraordinary meeting of the Council of Ministers was convened at which an ad hoc commission was established to examine the questions connected with the frontier dispute and make recommendations for its peaceful settlement.³⁴⁹ Other cases of mediation by heads of State include the following: in 1966, President Mobutu of Zaire, at the request of the OAU Assembly, mediated in an ethnic conflict between Rwanda and Burundi;³⁵⁰ in 1972, the President of Somalia and the Administrative Secretary-General of OAU successfully mediated in serious troop clashes and border incidents between the United Republic of Tanzania and Uganda.³⁵¹

283. Furthermore, an ad hoc committee was created by the Assembly in 1971 to attempt to mediate in a conflict involving Guinea and Senegal on the extradition of Guinean exiles alleged to have committed acts of government destabilization in Guinea.³⁵² More recently, the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity created an Ad Hoc Committee of Heads of State on Western Sahara in order to find a peaceful solution to the ongoing conflict between Morocco and the Popular Front for the Liberation of Saguia el-Hamra and Rio de Oro (POLISARIO Front). That Ad Hoc Committee set up the Implementation Committee of Heads of State on Western Sahara to ensure the observance of a cease-fire that had to be agreed upon between the parties to the dispute. Also, the Implementation Committee had to organize and conduct a referendum, under the auspices of OAU and the United Nations, to enable the people of that territory to exercise their right to self-determination.³⁵³

284. Two specific instances may be cited, as regards juridical settlement, in which the Convention's provisions were invoked. First, they were invoked as a basis of the International Court of Justice's jurisdiction in the 1969 North Sea Continental Shelf cases. The Convention also was at the basis of an agreement dated 17 July 1971 between Austria and Italy accepting the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in connection with any dispute concerning the status of the German-speaking minority in the southern Tyrol.³⁵⁴

4. Relations between regional agencies or arrangements and the United Nations in the field of the peaceful settlement of local disputes

285. An important question concerns the harmonization of various provisions of the Charter of the United Nations dealing with the respective competence of regional agencies or arrangements under Article 52 of the Charter on the one hand and of the United Nations organs, on the other, in the area of the peaceful settlement of local disputes. These provisions are, mainly, Articles 34, 35, paragraph 1, and 52 of the Charter of the United Nations. While the States members of some regional bodies have consistently observed the principle of "try first" the machinery of the regional body concerned and have acquiesced in resolutions of their regional body reaffirming this principle,³⁵⁵ some States members of other regional bodies have insisted that disputes to which they are parties be handled directly by the Security Council.³⁵⁶

286. A practice has evolved which tends to reconcile in a balanced manner the "regional" and the "universal" approaches represented by the positions described in the preceding paragraph. Certainly, if the parties to a dispute agree ab initio to resort to a regional agency or agreement for the peaceful resolution of a local dispute and both parties maintain this initial disposition throughout the various stages of the regional procedure, then the regional attempts to solve the local dispute may prove effective and fruitful, to the exclusion of the universal forum.

287. The question really arises whenever one of the parties to a local dispute has reservations about the regional forum and is interested in having direct access to the universal forum of the United Nations and brings the dispute to the attention of the Security Council. Under such circumstances, the Security Council has evolved a practice whereby it inscribes the matter in its agenda. After consultations with the parties to the dispute and if the dispute has not yet become sufficiently acute as actually to endanger international peace and security, the Council may decide, in accordance with Article 52, paragraphs 2 and 3, of the Charter, to refer the dispute to the regional forum but keep the matter in its agenda, under review. The advantage of maintaining the dispute in the agenda of the Security Council while the dispute is being handled in the regional forum and the Council awaits the latter's report lies in the fact that if the dispute evolves into one actually endangering international peace and security, or if one of the parties to the dispute deems the regional procedure

I. Other peaceful means

1. Main characteristics and legal framework

288. The list of means for the peaceful settlement of disputes contained in Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations is completed by the phrase "other peaceful means".³⁵⁸ These words indicate that the list found in that Article is not exhaustive, but is illustrative only. The obligation imposed on States by Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter—and by a number of treaties in which the terms of that provision are incorporated³⁵⁹—is that they must endeavour to settle their disputes by the use of peaceful procedures. To this end, they may use any procedure they wish and on the use of which they can agree, provided that it is peaceful in nature. States are therefore free to use that particular means which they consider most apt for the settlement of the particular dispute with which they are faced,³⁶⁰ provided that it falls within the framework of Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter, even if it is not specifically listed therein.

2. Resort to other peaceful means

289. Examples may be found of cases in which States have endeavoured to settle, or have provided for the settlement of, their disputes by the use of means which constitute "other peaceful means" within the meaning of Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter. Analysis of the practice adopted up to now by States reveals that while in certain of these cases the means which States have used, or for which they have provided, are completely novel in character, in a majority of cases the means which States have used or provided for represent adaptations or combinations of familiar means of settlement. The means which come within the scope of the present section of the handbook may therefore be considered to fall into three broad categories: (a) those constituting entirely novel means which are not adaptations or combinations of the familiar means of settlement described in the preceding sections of the present chapter; (b) those constituting adaptations of one of the familiar means of settlement; and (c) those constituting combinations, in the work of a single organ charged with resolving the dispute, of two or more of the familiar means of settlement.

³⁵⁸See also the second paragraph of the second principle proclaimed in the preamble to the Friendly Relations Declaration (supra, chap. 1, para. 2), as well as section 1, paragraph 5, of the Manila Declaration (ibid.).

³⁵⁹See, for example, article XI (1) of the Antarctic Treaty, signed at Washington on 1 December 1959, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 402, p. 71; and article 32 (1) of the United Nations Convention against Illegal Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, done at Vienna on 20 December 1988 (E/CONF.82/15 and Corr.2).

³⁶⁰In this connection, it may be recalled that under section 1, paragraph 5, of the Manila Declaration the parties to a dispute are enjoined to "agree on such peaceful means as may be appropriate to the circumstances and nature of the dispute" in hand. A similar injunction can be found in article 15 (2) of the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (General Assembly resolution 34/68 of 5 December 1979, annex).

(a) Novel means which do not consist in the adaptation or combination of familiar means

290. States often make provision for or use of means of peaceful settlement which do not appear in the list of specific means contained in Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter and whose originality does not reside in the manner in which those means are adapted or combined. Certain of these means—namely, consultations, international conferences and good offices—are described elsewhere in the present handbook and do not call for further discussion here;³⁶¹ but there do exist others.

291. A novel procedure not listed in Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter which States may choose to employ consists in the referral of their dispute for a ruling to a political or non-judicial organ of an international organization. They may agree that the ruling of that body is to be binding upon them or they may agree that it is to be advisory in nature only, but in either case the procedure merits consideration as a means of settlement which is distinct both from the familiar means described in the other sections of this chapter and from the less familiar means described elsewhere in this section, at least where the dispute to be settled is predominantly legal in nature.

292. The constituent instruments of many international organizations provide that disputes relating to their interpretation and application are to be referred for a ruling to the political or non-judicial organs of those organizations. The relevant provisions of these instruments are reviewed elsewhere in the present handbook and do not call for further analysis here.³⁶² However, States often choose to employ a similar procedure to settle disputes arising out of treaties which are not the constituent instruments of international organizations. In such cases, they typically designate as the body to which their disputes are to be referred an organ of that international organization whose responsibilities include the matter which is the subject of the treaty between them.

293. For example, many treaties dealing with aviation matters provide that disputes relating to their interpretation or application are to be referred for a ruling to the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization.³⁶³ Sometimes it is stipulated that the ruling of that body is to have the status of an advisory report.³⁶⁴ Thus, for example, the Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United

³⁶²See chaps. III and IV below.

³⁶³Or to its predecessor, the Interim Council of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization.

³⁶⁴Occasionally it is further provided that the parties to the dispute are to endeavour, within certain limits, to secure the implementation of the advice contained in the report. Cf. the provisions referred to in paragraphs 300 and 301 of the present section. Indeed, a provision of this type is usual in those bilateral air services agreements which provide for the reference of disputes to the ICAO Council for an advisory report. See, for example, article VIII of the Air Transport Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States of Brazil, signed at Rio de Janeiro on 31 October 1946; United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 11, p. 115.

Kingdom relating to Air Services between their respective Territories, signed at Bermuda on 11 February 1946,³⁶⁵ provided in its article 9 that:

“Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement or in its Annex, any dispute between the Contracting Parties relating to the interpretation or application of this Agreement or its Annex which cannot be settled through consultations shall be referred for an advisory report to the Interim Council of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organisation . . . or its successor.”

Likewise, the North Atlantic Weather Stations Agreement, signed at London on 12 May 1949,³⁶⁶ provides in its article XIV that:

“Any dispute relating to the interpretation or application of this Agreement or Annex II, which is not settled by negotiation, shall, upon the request of any Contracting Government party to the dispute, be referred to the Council [of the International Civil Aviation Organisation] for its recommendation.”

On other occasions, the treaty stipulates that the ruling of the Council is to be binding upon the parties to the dispute. Thus, for example, the Agreement between the Government of the Kingdom of Thailand and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for Air Services between and beyond their respective Territories, signed at Bangkok on 10 November 1950,³⁶⁷ provides in its article 9 that:

“2. . . . either Contracting Party may submit the dispute for decision to any tribunal competent to decide it which may hereafter be established within the International Civil Aviation Organisation or, if there is not such tribunal, to the Council of the said Organisation.

“3. The Contracting Parties undertake to comply with any decision given under paragraph 2 of this article.”

294. A procedure closely analogous to the one described above consists in the submission of a dispute for an advisory report to a panel of experts which, while it is not an organ of an international organization, is nevertheless a non-judicial body operating within its framework. An example of a treaty which envisages the use of such a procedure is the International Plant Protection Convention, done at Rome on 6 December 1951,³⁶⁸ which provides in its article IX:

“1. If there is any dispute regarding the interpretation or application of this Convention, or if a contracting Government considers that any action by another contracting Government is in conflict with the obligations of the latter under articles V and VI of this Convention . . . the Government or Governments concerned may request the Director-General of FAO to appoint a committee to consider the question in dispute.

“2. The Director-General of FAO shall thereupon, after consultation with the Governments concerned, appoint a committee of experts which shall include representatives of those Governments . . .

“3. The contracting Governments agree that the recommendations of such a committee, while not binding in character, will become the basis for renewed consideration by the Governments concerned of the matter out of which the disagreement arose.”

295. An unusual method for the settlement of disputes arising under a treaty is to be found in some of the agreements concluded by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission of the United States. For example, the Agreement on Research Participation and Technical Exchange between the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission (USNRC) and the Federal Ministry for Research and Technology of the Federal Republic of Germany (FRGMRT) in the USNRC Loss of Fluid Test (LOFT) Research Program covering a Four-year Period, signed at Washington on 20 June 1975,³⁶⁹ provides in its article VI (A):

“Any disputes between the USNRC and FRGMRT concerning the application or interpretation of this Agreement that is not settled through consultation shall be submitted to the jurisdiction of the United States federal courts. This agreement shall be construed in accordance with the internal federal law applicable in the appropriate United States courts, to agreements to which the Government of the United States is a party.”

An identically worded provision is to be found in article VI (A) of the Agreement on Research Participation and Technical Exchange between the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Nordic Group (Forsogsanlaeg Riso, Denmark; Valtion Teknillinen Tutkimuskeskus, Finland; Institut for Atomenergi, Norway; and Ab Atomenergi, Sweden) in the USNRC LOFT Research Program and the Nordic Norhav Project covering a Four-year Period, concluded on 15 September 1976.³⁷⁰

(b) Adaptations of familiar means

296. As has been noted in the preceding sections of the present chapter, States are free to make adaptations to most of the means of settlement listed in Article 33, paragraph I, of the Charter. States might exercise this power of adaptation in such a way as to change the very nature of what might otherwise be considered a familiar method of settlement and thereby create a distinct, new process.

³⁶⁹Ibid., vol. 1066, p. 211.

³⁷⁰Ibid., vol. 1088, p. 53. See also the Agreement on Research Participation and Technical Exchange between the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Österreichische Studiengesellschaft für Atomenergie in the USNRC PBF Research Program covering a Four-year Period, signed on 25 February and on 3 March 1977, ibid., vol. 1087, p. 267, article V.

297. For example, it is an essential feature of conciliation that the conclusions contained in the report of the conciliator are proposals only, and it remains within the unfettered discretion of the parties whether or not to accept them: the purpose of conciliation is to facilitate, and not to replace the need for, negotiations between the parties.³⁷¹ Consequently, for the parties to a dispute to agree in advance to accept as binding and to abide by the terms of the settlement proffered by the conciliator would be to alter the very nature and outcome of the process. Those cases in which States have assumed such an obligation should therefore be considered instances of a distinct adaptation of conciliation.

298. A recent example of an agreement between States to adapt the method of conciliation so as to make binding the report of the conciliator is the Treaty Establishing the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States, done at Basseterre on 18 June 1981,³⁷² article 14 (3) of which provides:

“Any decisions or recommendations of the Conciliation Commission in resolution of the dispute shall be final and binding on the Member States.”

Similarly, annex A, paragraph 6, of that Treaty provides:

“... The report of the [Conciliation] Commission, including any conclusions stated therein regarding the facts or questions of law, shall be binding upon the parties.”

299. States may also agree that while the report of the conciliator is not to be binding upon them they are nevertheless to be under an obligation to consider in good faith the recommendations which it contains or to make them the basis of their future negotiations. Thus, for example, article 11 (5) of the Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer, done at Vienna on 22 March 1985,³⁷³ provides in its article 11 (5) that:

“The [Conciliation] Commission shall render a final and recommendatory award, which the parties shall consider in good faith.”

A provision of this type gives to the report of the conciliator a legal importance greater than that which is typically enjoyed by such a document. Cases in which States have assumed an obligation of the kind described thus involve a departure from the traditional practice of conciliation. They should consequently be considered instances of a distinct adaptation of that method.

300. It is an essential feature of mediation that the terms of settlement presented to the parties by the mediator are proposals only, and it remains within the unfettered discretion of the parties whether or not to accept them.³⁷⁴ Consequently, for the parties to a dispute to agree in advance to abide by the terms of the settlement placed before them by the mediator would be to alter the very nature and outcome of the process. Those cases in which States have agreed to such an obligation should, therefore, be considered instances of a distinct adaptation of mediation.

301. France and New Zealand made use of a procedure of this type in order to settle the dispute between them arising out of the sinking of the Rainbow Warrior. Following the intervention of the Prime Minister of the Netherlands, who proffered the parties his good offices, the two States approached the Secretary-General of the United Nations in order to ask him "to act as mediator in the dispute" between them.³⁷⁵ The Secretary-General indicated his willingness to do so.³⁷⁶ The two States then proceeded to agree "to refer all of the problems between them arising out of the Rainbow Warrior affair to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for a ruling".³⁷⁷ They also "agreed to abide by his ruling".³⁷⁸ The Secretary-General announced that he was willing to undertake this task and to make his ruling in the near future.³⁷⁹ The "mandate" which the parties gave the Secretary-General was to find solutions which "both respect[ed] and reconcile[d]" the conflicting positions of the parties³⁸⁰ and which at the same time were both "equitable and principled".³⁸¹ To this end, once each of the parties had presented its position to him in a brief written memorandum,³⁸² the Secretary-General made contact with the parties through diplomatic channels "in order to satisfy [himself] that [he] had a full and complete understanding of their respective positions and to be sure that [he was] able to produce a ruling" of that type.³⁸³ He then proceeded to issue his ruling, one of the terms of which was that "[t]he two Governments should conclude and bring into force as soon as possible binding agreements incorporating" the other, substantive terms of his ruling.³⁸⁴ The parties did this three days later by means of three exchanges of letters.³⁸⁵

302. It is one of the essential features of arbitration that it results in the handing down of an award which is binding upon the parties to the dispute and which they are obligated to implement.³⁸⁶ However, States are free to alter even this aspect of the arbitral process if they so wish, and to agree in advance that the award of the arbitral tribunal shall have the juridical nature of a recommendation only. Cases in which States have agreed that the award of an arbitral tribunal is to have this character should be considered instances of a distinct adaptation of arbitration.

303. Many examples of such provisions can be found in State practice. In some cases, the dispute-settlement clause or compromis does not, either explicitly or implicitly, impose on the States parties to the arbitration any obligation to comply with the conclusions set forth in the award of the arbitral tribunal, though it may impose on them an obligation to give those findings sympathetic consideration. Thus, for example, the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects, opened for signature at London, Moscow and Washington on 29 March 1972,³⁸⁷ provides in its article XIX (2) that:

“The decision of the [Claims] Commission shall be final and binding if the parties have so agreed; otherwise the Commission shall render a final and recommendatory award, which the parties shall consider in good faith.” (emphasis added)

304. In other cases, States, while agreeing that the award of the arbitral tribunal is to have the status of a recommendation rather than of a binding decision, also undertake, within certain limits, to endeavour to secure the implementation of the conclusions contained in the award. Thus, for example, the Air Transport Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Italy, signed at Rome on 6 February 1948,³⁸⁸ provided in its article 12 that:

“Except as otherwise provided in the present Agreement or its Annex, any dispute between the contracting parties relative to the interpretation or application of the present Agreement or its Annex, which cannot be settled through consultation, shall be submitted for an advisory report to a tribunal of three arbitrators . . . The executive authorities of the contracting parties will use their best efforts under the powers available to them to put into effect the opinion expressed in any such advisory report . . .”

In 1964, the United States and Italy decided to take to arbitration under that article a dispute which had arisen between them concerning the interpretation of the 1948 Agreement;³⁸⁹ and in the following year the arbitral tribunal constituted pursuant to that compromis handed down its advisory opinion.³⁹⁰

305. A further example of such a provision can be found in article X of the Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Provisional Government of the French Republic relating to Air Services between their respective Territories, signed at Paris on 27 March

1946,³⁹¹ as amended in 1951.³⁹² That article is almost indistinguishable from article 12 of the United States-Italy agreement of 1948, in that it provides for an arbitral award which is to have the status of an “advisory report” but also contains an undertaking by the parties to endeavour, within certain limits,³⁹³ to implement the advice which it contains. However, when in 1962-1963 the United States and France decided to take to arbitration under article X a dispute which had arisen between them relating to the 1946 Agreement,³⁹⁴ they agreed in an exchange of letters “to consider the decision of the Arbitral Tribunal in this dispute, as binding upon [them]”.³⁹⁵ Moreover, when a further aviation dispute arose between the two States in 1978, they agreed in clause 2 of the agreement by which they submitted the dispute to arbitration under article X of the 1946 Agreement that, while the award of the arbitral tribunal on the second of the two questions put to it was to be advisory only, as envisaged by article X, its award on the first question was to be binding.³⁹⁶ It should therefore be realized that, while States may agree to settle their future disputes by employing a procedure in which the process of arbitration is modified in such a way as to make the award of the arbitral tribunal recommendatory only, they are nevertheless free, when they use that procedure to settle a particular dispute, to agree that it should nevertheless result in a decision which is legally binding upon them.³⁹⁷

³⁹³In the English text, these limits are specified in terms identical to those used in article 12 of the United States-Italy agreement. The French text, which is equally authentic, provides: “les parties contractantes feront de leur mieux dans les limites de leurs pouvoirs légaux pour donner effet à l’avis consultatif”. ³⁹⁶*Compromis* of Arbitration between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the French Republic, signed at Washington on 11 July 1978; United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 1106, p. 195. Clauses 9, 10 and 11 of this agreement accordingly describe the award of the tribunal as “a decision and advisory report”.

³⁹⁷Cases exist of dispute-settlement clauses and compromis which appear to provide for a departure from one of the essential features of arbitration, in so far as they stipulate that the award of the arbitral tribunal is to be advisory only, but which do in fact impose on the States parties an obligation to implement in full the advice which the arbitral award contains. See, for example, paragraphs 1 and 5 of the Agreement between the Governments of the French Republic, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America for the Submission to an Arbitrator of Certain Claims with respect to Gold Looted by the Germans from Rome in 1943, signed at Washington on 25 April 1951, ibid., vol. 91, p. 21.

(c) Combination of two or more familiar means in the work of a single organ

306. While it is by no means uncommon for a treaty to envisage the sequential application to a given dispute of several different means of settlement,³⁹⁸ it is more unusual for a treaty to provide for two—or more—different methods to be applied sequentially by one and the same organ. The procedures instituted by such treaties merit consideration as autonomous means of dispute settlement, distinct from the two methods of which they are a combination. It is for this reason that conciliation, which involves the sequential discharge by one organ of the tasks of inquiry and mediation,³⁹⁹ is listed in Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter as a discrete means of settlement, distinct from both of those other two methods.

307. The two methods of conciliation and arbitration may be combined and administered by a single organ. This may occur where a treaty, in addition to empowering an arbitral tribunal to hand down a binding decision, also authorizes that body, before issuing its final award, to try to bring the parties to an amicable settlement of their dispute by proposing to them the terms of a satisfactory solution. Thus, for example, the Agreement on Economic and Technical Cooperation between the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Government of the Republic of Senegal, signed at Dakar on 12 June 1965,⁴⁰⁰ provides in its article 6 (5) that:

“ . . . Before giving its verdict, [the arbitral tribunal] may, at any stage of the proceedings, propose an amicable settlement of the dispute to be agreed by the Parties.”

Sometimes the exercise of this power of conciliation is made mandatory, rather than optional, the arbitral tribunal being empowered to proceed to hand down a binding award only after it has first tried and failed to persuade the parties to resolve their differences by proposing to them the terms of a possible settlement. Thus, the Agreement concerning Air Services between France and Kuwait, signed at Kuwait on 5 January 1975,⁴⁰¹ provides in its article 14 (4) that:

“If the arbitral tribunal cannot arrive at an amicable settlement of the dispute, it shall take a decision by majority vote . . .”

308. A recent example of an agreement between States thus to combine in the work of a single organ the methods of conciliation and arbitration, it being incumbent upon the arbitral tribunal to explore the possibilities of conciliation before proceeding to hand down an award, is the Arbitration Compromis between Israel and Egypt, done at Giza on 11 September 1986.⁴⁰²

³⁹⁸See, for example, the instruments cited in chapter II, section E of the handbook, notes 91 and 92; article 286 of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea; articles 65 (3) and 66 of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties; and article 21 of the 1928 General Act for the Pacific Settlement of Disputes.

³⁹⁹See chap. II.D.1, para. 123.

⁴⁰²*International Legal Materials*, vol. XXVI (1987), p. 2.

By article II of that agreement, Israel and Egypt submitted a dispute concerning the demarcation of a portion of their land boundary for decision by a five-member arbitral tribunal. At the same time, they also agreed, in article IX, that:

“1. A three-member chamber of the [arbitration] Tribunal shall explore the possibilities of a settlement of the dispute. The three members shall be the two national arbitrators and, as selected by the President of the Tribunal . . . , one of the two non-national arbitrators.

“2. . . . [T]his chamber shall give thorough consideration to the suggestions made by any member of the chamber for a proposed recommendation concerning a settlement of the dispute . . . Any proposed recommendation concerning a settlement of the dispute which obtains the approval of the three members of the chamber will be reported as a recommendation to the parties not later than the completion of the exchange of written pleadings . . .

“3. The arbitration process shall terminate in the event the parties jointly inform the Tribunal in writing that they have decided to accept a recommendation of the chamber and that they have decided that the arbitration process should cease. Otherwise, the arbitration process shall continue in accordance with this Compromis.

“4. All work pursuant to the above paragraphs absolutely shall not delay the arbitration process . . .”

A three-member chamber of the arbitral tribunal was constituted pursuant to paragraph (1) of the article, but in spite of the efforts of the chamber to find a proposal which might prove acceptable to both of the States parties to the arbitration, it was unable to place before them any recommendation for a settlement of the dispute.⁴⁰³ The arbitration tribunal, consequently, proceeded, in accordance with paragraph (3), to hear the parties' oral arguments to hand down an award.⁴⁰⁴

309. The methods of conciliation and arbitration may also be combined in the work of a single organ in a manner rather different from that described in the two preceding paragraphs. In addition to empowering an arbitral tribunal to hand down a binding award, States may also direct that body, at the same time as it issues its award, to recommend to them the manner in which they should agree to implement the conclusions which it contains. A well-known instance of a treaty in which States did this is the Special Agreement for the Submission of Questions relating to Fisheries on the North Atlantic Coast under the General Treaty of Arbitration concluded between the United States and Great Britain on 4 April 1908, signed at Washington on 27 January 1909.⁴⁰⁵ Under article 1 of that agreement, the United States and Great Britain submitted a series of seven questions for binding decision to a tribunal of arbitration. At the same time, they also agreed, in article 4, that:

⁴⁰³Award of 29 September 1988 of the Egypt-Israel Arbitration Tribunal Established in Accordance with the Compromis Signed 11 September 1986, ibid., vol. XXVII (1988), p. 1427, at paras. 8-11.

⁴⁰⁵Scott, The Hague Court Reports (supra, note 28), p. 147.

“The tribunal shall recommend for the consideration . . . of the Parties rules and a method of procedure under which all questions which may arise in future regarding the exercise of the liberties above referred to [which were the subject of the seven questions submitted to the tribunal for its decision] may be determined in accordance with the principles laid down in the award . . .”

The tribunal made several such recommendations,⁴⁰⁶ some of which were subsequently accepted by the parties, albeit with certain modifications.⁴⁰⁷

310. States may choose to combine in the work of a single organ the method of conciliation and that distinct means of settlement, described above,⁴⁰⁸ in which the process of conciliation is adapted so as to yield a binding final report. Thus, in addition to empowering a conciliation commission to hand down a binding final report, States may also authorize that body, before it issues such a report, to try to induce them to settle their dispute amicably by proposing to them the terms of a possible solution. Indeed, practice reveals that, if States choose to give the former power to a conciliation commission, they will usually choose also to give it the latter. Thus, for example, the Treaty Establishing the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States,⁴⁰⁹ in addition to providing that the report of the Conciliation Commission is to be binding, also stipulates, in its annex A, paragraph 4, that:

“The Commission may draw the attention of the parties to the dispute to any measures which might facilitate an amicable settlement.”

311. States may also agree to combine the two methods of negotiation and arbitration in the work of what is effectively a single organ. Usually, when States employ the two methods sequentially, such a combination does not occur, things being so arranged that those persons who are responsible for the conduct of the negotiations do not subsequently sit as arbitrators in respect of the same dispute. However, States may decide that this shall happen, thereby, in effect, entrusting the tasks of negotiation and arbitration to a single organ. In such cases, States usually charge the negotiations to a joint commission, composed of an equal number of their representatives or of persons appointed by them.⁴¹⁰ Such a commission may be empowered to agree upon a solution to the dispute which is binding upon the parties, or it may be authorized simply to formulate the terms of a draft settlement which has to be placed before the parties for their approval. If the negotiations within the commission should fail, however, the commissioners are to proceed to serve as arbitrators, together with a newly appointed, neutral member, creating the situation of an odd number of arbitrators overall. Thus, for example, the Agreement between Canada and France on their Mutual Fishing Relations, signed at Ottawa on 27 March 1972,⁴¹¹ provides in its article 10 that:

“ 1. The Contracting Parties shall establish a Commission to consider all disputes concerning the application of this Agreement.

“ 2. The Commission shall consist of one national expert nominated by each of the Parties for ten years. In addition, the two Governments shall designate by mutual agreement a third expert who shall not be a national of either Party.

“ 3. If, in connection with any dispute referred to the Commission by either of the Contracting Parties, the Commission has not within one month reached a decision acceptable to the Contracting Parties, reference shall be made to the third expert. The Commission shall then sit as an arbitral tribunal under the chairmanship of the third expert.

“ 4. Decisions of the Commission sitting as an arbitral tribunal shall be taken by a majority, and shall be binding on the Contracting Parties.”

However, when a dispute arose in 1985 between Canada and France concerning the application of the 1972 Agreement, the two States agreed⁴¹² that, notwithstanding the terms of paragraph (1), the matter should not be considered by the joint commission provided for in paragraph (2), but should, rather, be submitted directly to the three-member arbitral tribunal provided for in paragraph (3).⁴¹³

312. The procedure described in the preceding paragraph should be distinguished from those cases in which a dispute is referred, first, to a joint commission, and, if the commissioners cannot agree upon the terms of a settlement, is then brought before either an umpire or an arbitral tribunal whose membership does not include the commissioners who were responsible for the conduct of the failed negotiations.⁴¹⁴ In cases of the latter type, the tasks of negotiation and arbitration are entrusted not to one, but to two separate organs.

III. PROCEDURES ENVISAGED IN THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

A. Introduction

313. The principal organs of the United Nations established under Chapter III (Article 7, paragraph 1) of the Charter of the United Nations, namely, "a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat", constitute the most important part of the machinery necessary for the implementation of the main purposes and principles of the United Nations, in particular, to maintain international peace and security, and to that end to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, the adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace.

314. In exercising the powers conferred upon them by the Charter, the Security Council and the General Assembly⁴¹⁵ may call upon States parties to a dispute to use any of the peaceful means of settlement of disputes listed in Article 33, paragraph 1, of the Charter. As shown by the examples given in the present chapter, the organs themselves also rely upon the application of these peaceful means when they put in motion the process of settlement of a dispute.

315. This chapter is therefore aimed to illustrate the way in which the principal organs of the United Nations perform their functions in the area of the settlement of disputes between States.

B. The Security Council

1. Role of the Security Council in the peaceful settlement of disputes

316. Under Article 24 of the Charter, the Security Council has the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and in that context plays an important role in the settlement of disputes between States.

317. The Security Council, in performing its functions in the field of settlement of disputes, acts under various Chapters of the Charter and does not always indicate the Chapter under which it is proceeding. Primarily, the Council exercises the powers contained in Chapter VI of the Charter, using also other functions and powers under Chapter VII (under which the Council is empowered to take preventive or enforcement measures to maintain or restore international peace and security) and Chapter VIII, relating to procedures under regional agencies or arrangements. The main basis of its activities in the field of the peaceful settlement of disputes, however, is Chapter VI of the Charter, empowering the Security Council, inter alia: to investigate any dispute or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security;⁴¹⁶ to recommend, at any stage of a dispute or situation, appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment;⁴¹⁷ to establish whether the continuance of a dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security for the purpose of deciding whether to act under article 36 or of making recommendations for appropriate terms of settlement;⁴¹⁸ and to call upon the parties to settle their disputes by the peaceful means listed in Article 33, paragraph 1, or to make recommendations to them with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.⁴¹⁹ Thus, only the functions of the Security Council under Chapter VI, directly relating to the settlement of disputes, and some functions in this field under Chapter VIII, relating to procedures under regional agencies or arrangements, are discussed in the present section.

⁴¹⁵The Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council are not directly involved in the pacific settlement of disputes and situations, though they can indirectly contribute to their prevention or adjustment in performing their basic functions. These organs, as well as the International Court of Justice, already discussed in chapter II, section F, of the handbook, are therefore not considered in the present chapter.

318. Some examples of actions taken by the Security Council under the various Articles of Chapter VI on various questions referred to it for settlement are presented below to illustrate the functions of the Council in this field.

(a) Investigation of disputes and determination as to whether a situation is in fact likely to endanger international peace and security

319. With regard to its agenda item entitled "Complaint of armed invasion of Taiwan (Formosa)", the Security Council, relying on Article 34 of the Charter, affirmed that it was "its duty to investigate any situation likely to lead to international friction or to give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of such dispute or situation may endanger international peace and security, and likewise to determine the existence of any threat to peace".⁴²⁰

320. The task of investigating disputes or situations has been performed by the Security Council by various means. Thus, dealing with the situation concerning Western Sahara, the Council, at its 1850th meeting,⁴²¹ on 22 October 1975, by its resolution 377 (1975), acting "in accordance with Article 34 of the Charter", requested the Secretary-General to enter into immediate consultations with the parties concerned and to report to the Coun-

⁴¹⁸*Ibid.*, Article 37, paragraph 2.

⁴¹⁹*Ibid.*, Articles 33, paragraph 2, and 38.

⁴²⁰Security Council resolution 87 (1950) of 29 September 1950.

cil on the results of his consultations “in order to enable the Council to adopt the appropriate measures” to deal with the situation. With regard to the Spanish question, the Council, at its 39th meeting, on 29 April 1946, established a sub-committee and instructed it to examine the evidence and to report to the Council in order to enable the Council itself to determine the nature of the dispute, as envisaged in Article 34, although express reference to the Article was not made in the relevant Security Council resolution.⁴²² In the India-Pakistan question, by contrast, the Security Council, by its resolution of 20 January 1948,⁴²³ established an independent Commission for India and Pakistan to, inter alia, “investigate the facts pursuant to Article 34 of the Charter”. The Commission was composed of representatives of three Members of the United Nations: one member selected by each of the two parties, and the third designated by the two members so selected. Such a commission was also established in the Greek question.⁴²⁴ In that case, the Commission, pursuant to the Council’s decision of 19 December 1946, was composed of a representative of each member of the Council. In connection with the complaint by Benin (1977), the Security Council, at its 1987th meeting, on 8 February 1977, by its resolution 404 (1977), decided to send a Special Mission composed of three members of the Council to the People’s Republic of Benin in order to investigate the events of 16 January 1977 in Cotonou and to report on them.⁴²⁵ In connection with the situation in the occupied Arab territories, the Council, at its 2134th meeting, on 22 March 1979, by its resolution 446 (1979), established “a commission consisting of three members of the Security Council, to be appointed by the President of the Council after consultation with the members of the Council, to examine the situation relating to settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem” and requested the Commission “to submit its report to the Security Council by 1 July 1979”.⁴²⁶

321. The determination of the nature of disputes or situations under Article 34 is relevant also to the application of Article 37, according to which the Security Council is to decide whether to take appropriate steps if it deems that the continuance of the dispute “is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security”. In this connection it should be emphasized that, where the Council has established a subsidiary organ to carry out an investigation, it reserves the right of making the final determination as to the nature of the dispute or situation as envisaged in Article 34. This was illustrated by the actions it took in the above-mentioned Spanish question,⁴²⁷ which also brought to light the difficulties concerning the establishment of criteria for deciding whether a situation “is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security”.⁴²⁸

(b) Recommendation to States parties to a dispute to settle their disputes by peaceful means

322. The functions of the Security Council under this heading are described in Articles 36, 37 and 38 of the Charter. Thus, under Article 36, paragraph 1, the Council has the power to “recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment”; under Article 37, paragraph 2, it has the power to “recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate”; and under Article 38, the power to “make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute”. A review of the practice of the Security Council⁴²⁹ indicates, however, that evidence of the relation of the decisions by the Security Council to provisions of Articles 36 to 38, i.e., the application of those Articles in the work of the Council, has “continued to be scant”.⁴³⁰ Thus the assessment of the application of Articles 36 to 38 by the Security Council should be done primarily by taking into consideration their broad bearing on the work of the Council, especially the latest trends and developments in this field. The increasing importance of application of Articles 36 to 38 of the Charter for the realization of the role of the Security Council in pacific settlement can be clearly shown, for example, by the provisions of later instruments reflecting new important trends and developments in this field, such as the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes (see para. 2 above) (especially those contained in para. 7) and the 1988 Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field (see above, para. 2) (especially those contained in paras. 6-15).

(i) Recommendation of specific settlement terms

323. The application of Article 36 of the Charter by the Security Council is reviewed in the present section, not only in the light of the relevant decisions of the Council under the Article, according to which the Council may recommend procedures or methods of adjustment, but also in the light of the specific proceedings which constituted methods of adjustment or means for the settlement of the questions brought before the Council.

324. On the basis of a general review of the functions of the Security Council under Article 36, some examples of such specific procedures or methods of adjustment recommended or employed by the Council may be briefly summarized below:

(a) After consideration of the United Kingdom complaint against Albania arising out of an incident on 22 October 1946 in the Corfu Channel, the Council, at its 127th meeting, on 9 April 1947, recommended⁴³¹ that the parties refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice;

(b) In the course of the debate in connection with the Palestine question, in 1948, the Council identified the particular procedures and methods aimed at halting the hostilities. Procedures of pacific settlement under Chapter VI of the Charter were expressly asserted,⁴³² and the Council supplemented its earlier call⁴³³ for the cessation of acts of violence. As regards the procedures aimed at achieving the political settlement, the Security Council requested the convocation of a special session of the General Assembly in accordance with Article 20.⁴³⁴ The Council, in its resolutions, enjoined all concerned to take specific measures with a view to the cessation of violence and established a truce commission to supervise the implementation of these measures.⁴³⁵ It further instructed the United Nations Mediator in Palestine, appointed by the General Assembly, to promote a peaceful adjustment of the situation and to supervise the implementation of the cease-fire measures⁴³⁶ and reinforced them by the decision⁴³⁷ to consider possible action under Chapter VII in the case of the failure of the parties to implement the cease-fire resolution;

(c) In the course of the Council's efforts to assist the Governments of Malta and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in settling their differences regarding the delimitation of the continental shelf area between the two countries and in connection with the complaint by Malta against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (1980), the use of judicial procedures to obtain a peaceful resolution of the conflict was envisaged by the Council.⁴³⁸

325. As indicated in paragraph 310 above, the Security Council, in performing its functions in the pacific settlement of disputes, may rely upon the application of some of the specific means of peaceful settlement enumerated in Article 33 of the Charter. In a number of instances involving armed hostilities—for example, in the Indonesian question (1947),⁴³⁹ the Palestine question (1948)⁴⁴⁰ and the India-Pakistan question (1948-1950)⁴⁴¹—the Security Council adopted decisions under Article 36 involving recourse to procedures of good offices, mediation, conciliation and arbitration or other peaceful means. With respect to the India-Pakistan question, it may be further noted that the Security Council used a combination of such procedures as investigation, mediation, conciliation, good offices and arbitration.⁴⁴² In two questions not involving hostilities, the Iranian question (1946) and the Corfu Channel incidents, the Security Council, in the former instance, at its 5th meeting, on 30 January 1946,⁴⁴³ took note of the proposed recourse to direct negotiations and, in the latter, at its 127th meeting, on 9 April 1947,⁴⁴⁴ recommended settlement by judicial means.⁴⁴⁵ A call for negotiations was made, for example, in paragraph 5 of the Council's resolution 353 (1974) of 20 July 1974, adopted in connection with the situation in Cyprus, while in paragraph 2 of Security Council resolution 479 (1980), of 28 September 1980, adopted with regard to the situation between Iran and Iraq, the parties were urged to accept any appropriate offer of mediation or conciliation or resort to regional agencies or arrangements or other peaceful means. Other instances in which the Security Council has endorsed the efforts of the parties to settle their disputes by peaceful means include paragraph 6 of Council resolution 473 (1980) of 13 June 1980, adopted in connection with the question of South Africa, and paragraph 2 of Council resolution 395 (1976) of 25 August 1976, adopted with regard to the complaint by Greece against Turkey.

326. The Council has recognized that when using its power to make recommendations under Article 36, paragraph 2, it "should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties". This was illustrated at its meeting of 27 May 1958 in connection with the complaint by Lebanon. After its consideration of a proposal by the representative of Iraq that the Council postpone its consideration of the question pending its consideration at an upcoming meeting of the League of Arab States, when reference was made to Article 36, paragraph 2, the Council adopted⁴⁴⁶ the proposal to adjourn the meeting until 3 June 1958 (by which time it would be known whether the question could be resolved outside the Council), on the understanding that the Council would meet at short notice at the request of the representative of Lebanon.

327. The Charter provides that the Security Council, when exercising its power to recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment, should take into consideration the distribution of competence between the Council in the field of peaceful settlement of disputes and the International Court of Justice as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations.⁴⁴⁷ This distribution of competence is referred to in Article 36, paragraph 3, of the

⁴⁴⁴See Security Council resolution 22 (1947) of 9 April 1947.

⁴⁴⁵A detailed consideration of various ways and means of peaceful settlement involving activities of the Security Council in particular is contained in chapter II of the present handbook.

Charter, which provides that “in making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court”.⁴⁴⁸ One instance of the application of Article 36, paragraph 3, was the Corfu Channel incidents (1947), in connection with which the Council recommended, at its 127th meeting, on 9 April 1947,⁴⁴⁹ “that the United Kingdom and Albanian Governments should immediately refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court”.⁴⁵⁰ Another example is the question of the detention of United States diplomatic personnel in Tehran, in which the Council, in its resolution 461 (1979), of 31 December 1979, took into account the Order of the International Court of Justice of 15 December 1979 (S/13697).⁴⁵¹ However, in its resolution 395 (1976) of 25 August 1976, concerning the complaint by Greece against Turkey, the Council invited both Governments to continue to take into account the contribution that appropriate judicial means, in particular the International Court of Justice, would make within the purpose of the pacific settlement of remaining differences in connection with the dispute. Thus the question was being considered by both the Security Council and the International Court of Justice.

328. The practice indicates, however, that the distinction between the “appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment” which can be recommended by the Council under Article 36, paragraph 1, and “terms of settlement” which can be recommended by the Council under Article 37, paragraph 2 (in addition to its right to call upon the parties to settle the dispute by the peaceful means under Article 33), is not always clear. As an example appears the recommendation by the Council in its resolution 47 (1948) adopted at its 286th meeting, on 21 April 1948,⁴⁵² for a plebiscite concerning the State of Jammu and Kashmir in order to settle the India-Pakistan question. The role played by the Security Council under Article 36 is closely connected with its role under Article 37,⁴⁵³ which provides that “if the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate”.

⁴⁴⁸Another important issue of the “distribution of competence” of the principal organs in this field—the correlation between the Security Council and the General Assembly—will be considered in section C dealing with the role of the General Assembly, in particular under Articles 11, 12 and 35, paragraph 3.

⁴⁵²See Official Records of the Security Council, Third Year, No. 61, 286th meeting, pp. 9-40.

⁴⁵³In considering the role played by the Security Council in pacific settlement in the course of application of Article 37, it is necessary to mention that the application of the Article is closely related to the application not only of Article 36, but also of other Articles of Chapter VI of the Charter, namely, Articles 33, 34 and 35 (see ibid., Second Year, No. 59, 159th meeting, document S/410, pp. 1343-1345; ibid., Third Year, No. 115, 364th meeting, p. 36).

329. It is necessary, however, to point out in respect of the application of Article 37, paragraph 2, that the Security Council takes into account the positions of the parties to the dispute.⁴⁵⁴ This issue is illustrated, for example, in the Council's consideration of the India-Pakistan and the Suez Canal questions. During the proceeding on the India-Pakistan question, in 1957, the Council adopted a resolution which omitted the terms that were regarded as unacceptable by one of the parties in the dispute and adopted a draft resolution which took into account the position of both parties.⁴⁵⁵ In dealing with the Suez Canal question, at its 743rd meeting, on 13 October 1956, the Council failed to adopt a second part of the draft resolution which had not been accepted by both parties.⁴⁵⁶

(ii) General recommendation to the parties to resort to peaceful means of settlement of the dispute

330. With respect to Article 38, which provides that, "without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute", it should be noted that the Council is empowered to make recommendations which are not necessarily limited to disputes the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

331. Articles 33 to 37 deal with disputes the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, while Article 38 gives the Security Council the power to make recommendations with respect to "any dispute" if "all the parties" so request. However, the practice shows that States have tended not to make such a request under Article 38.⁴⁵⁷

332. Nevertheless, in future, the possibility of more frequent recourse by States to Article 38 cannot be excluded in view of the new demands facing the international community and the United Nations in the field of the prevention and pacific settlement of disputes. This can be expected, for example, in connection with the application of the provisions of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes, which, inter alia, reaffirms the need to exert utmost efforts in order to settle any conflicts and disputes between States exclusively by peaceful means. The same can be expected in the application of the Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and ⁴⁵⁶*Official Records of the Security Council, Eleventh Year, 743rd meeting*, para. 106.

⁴⁵⁷There are instances in which the point was raised in incidental statements as to whether the Security Council, having been seized of the question at the request of both parties and having based recommendations on consultations by the President of the Council with the representatives of the parties, had been performing the functions under Article 38; e.g., during the consideration of the India-Pakistan question; see ibid., Third Year, Nos. 16-35, 245th meeting, pp. 115 and 116 and ibid., No. 74, 304th meeting, p. 21.

Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field, which provides in its paragraph 1 (5) that "States concerned should consider approaching the relevant organs of the United Nations in order to obtain advice or recommendations on preventive means for dealing with a dispute or situation".

(c) Relation to procedures under regional agencies or arrangements

333. In addition to Chapter VI of the Charter, which deals directly with the pacific settlement of disputes, provisions relevant to the role of the Security Council in the field of peaceful settlement are found also in Chapter VIII, concerning "Regional arrangements".⁴⁵⁸

334. According to Article 52, paragraph 3, of the Charter, the Security Council "shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes" through "regional arrangements" or by "regional agencies" either "on the initiative of the States concerned" or "by reference from the Security Council". Under paragraph 2 of the same Article it is provided that the Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council. Thus, as analysed in chapter II, section H, above, some States members of certain regional agencies have taken the position that local disputes should first be tried through the mechanism of the relevant regional agency, while others have maintained the view that local disputes to which they are parties should be handled directly by the Security Council.

335. The practice of application of Chapter VIII, under its Article 54, is that the Security Council is kept informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation by regional organizations through communications addressed to the United Nations Secretary-General, from the Secretary-General of the respective regional organizations⁴⁵⁹ and from States parties to a dispute or situation.⁴⁶⁰

2. Recent trends

336. Some of the international instruments recently adopted by the Organization reflect the ongoing process of positive changes in international relations and the growing awareness of the interdependence of States, indicating the trend to add new significance to the efforts of the United Nations in the area of prevention and peaceful settlement of international disputes and to enhance the effectiveness of the role of the Security Council in this field.

337. Thus, in the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes, the General Assembly called upon Member States to strengthen "the primary role of the Security Council so that it may fully and effectively discharge its responsibilities, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, in the area of the settlement of disputes or of any situation the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security” (sect. II, para. 4). The Declaration stressed the need to consider “making greater use of the fact-finding capacity of the Security Council in accordance with the Charter” (sect. II, para. 4 (d)); encouraged the Council “to make wider use, as a means to promote peaceful settlement of disputes, of the subsidiary organs established by it in the performance of its functions under the Charter” (sect. II, para. 4 (e)) and “to act without delay, in accordance with its functions and powers, particularly in cases where international disputes develop into armed conflicts” (sect. II, para. 4 (g)).

⁴⁵⁸Resort to regional agencies or arrangements for the purpose of pacific settlement of disputes is considered in detail in Chapter II, section H, of the present handbook.

⁴⁵⁹See, e.g., Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs, Supplement No. 4, vol. I, Articles 1-54 of the Charter, Annex, Tabulation of communications, sects. A and B, p. 416.

338. Some of the principles in the 1982 Manila Declaration have been further specified in the 1988 Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations Which May Threaten International Peace and Security and on the Role of the United Nations in this Field, which addressed both States and the United Nations organs, as well as in the 1991 Declaration on Fact-finding by the United Nations in the Field of the Maintenance of International Peace and Security.

339. Thus, the General Assembly in the 1988 Declaration called upon States parties to a dispute or directly concerned with a situation, particularly if they intended to request a meeting of the Security Council, to approach the Council, “directly or indirectly, at an early stage and, if appropriate, on a confidential basis” (para. 1 (6)). An emphasis on the necessity to approach the Council at an early stage and on a confidential basis (if appropriate) reflects the need to develop the preventive abilities and potentials of the Council and enhances its effectiveness through informal, confidential contacts with the States concerned.

340. A need for the improvement of monitoring capacities of the Security Council, for the purposes of prevention, on the basis of regular interaction with high-level governmental structures of the States in respect of international situations is formulated by the Declaration in its call addressed to the Security Council to “consider holding from time to time meetings, including at a high level with the participation, in particular, of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, or consultations to review the international situation and search for effective ways of improving it” (para. 1 (7)).

341. Special attention is given to preparations for the prevention or removal of particular disputes or situations. For this purpose, the Security Council is urged to “consider making use of the various means at its disposal, including the appointment of the Secretary-General as rapporteur for a specified question” (para. 1 (8)).

342. The Declaration also outlines procedures and actions of the Security Council in cases when disputes or situations are brought to its attention “without a meeting being requested”. Such procedures include “holding consultations with a view to examining the facts of the dispute or situation and keeping it under review, with the assistance of the Secretary-General when needed” and granting the States concerned “the opportunity of making their views known” (para. 1 (9)). In respect of such consultations, the Declaration again stresses the necessity of wider use of informal, confidential procedures, stating that "consideration should be given to employing such informal methods as the Security Council deems appropriate, including confidential contacts by its President" (para. 1 (10)).

343. Furthermore, the Declaration suggests to the Security Council, in connection with particular disputes or situations, to "consider, inter alia:

"(a) Reminding the States concerned to respect their obligations under the Charter;

"(b) Making an appeal to the States concerned to refrain from any action which might give rise to a dispute or lead to the deterioration of the dispute or situation;

"(c) Making an appeal to the States concerned to take action which might help to remove, or to prevent the continuation or deterioration of, the dispute or situation" (para. 1 (11)).

344. Stressing again the preventive functions of the United Nations activities in this field, the Declaration formulates "means of preventing" the further "deterioration of the dispute or situation in the areas concerned" which the Security Council should consider, namely "sending, at an early stage, fact-finding or good offices missions or establishing appropriate forms of United Nations presence" (para. 1 (12)). The 1991 Declaration on Fact-finding also calls for the use of fact-finding by the Security Council.

345. The Security Council's responsibility for promoting resort to regional agencies or arrangements also was not omitted by the Declaration, which indicated the Council's obligation to consider "encouraging and, where appropriate, endorsing efforts at the regional level by the States concerned or by regional arrangements or agencies to prevent or remove a dispute or situation in the region concerned" (para. 1 (13)).

346. Once again the balance between the right of States to settle their disputes on the basis of the principle of free choice of means of settlement and the Security Council's responsibility in the field of pacific settlement was reaffirmed: "Taking into consideration any procedures that have already been adopted by the States directly concerned, the Security Council should consider recommending to them appropriate procedures or methods of settlement of disputes or adjustment of situations, and such terms of settlement as it deems appropriate" (para. 1 (14)).

347. The Declaration emphasized once more the existing distribution of competence between the Security Council and the International Court of Justice in this area, drawing attention to the role played by the Council in the promotion of settlement on the basis of judicial procedures: "The Security Council, if it is appropriate for promoting the prevention and removal of disputes or situations, should, at an early stage, consider making use of the provisions of the Charter concerning the possibility of requesting the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question" (para. 1 (15)). It should be noted in this respect that the necessity of appropriate actions "at an early stage" was stressed once again, clearly indicating the growing emphasis on preventive functions of the United Nations in this field.

348. New trends in the practice of the Security Council are also reflected in the 1989 and 1990 reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization.⁴⁶¹ The reports contain a review of the latest multilateral efforts of the Council in this field, emphasizing the strong support given by the Council's resolutions to the peace process in various regions of the world. They point out the regular interaction between the Security Council and the Secretary-General and the fact that the latter has frequently been encouraged to continue to lend his good offices on the basis of the mandate entrusted to him by the Council. They also mention attempts to pave the way to an effective negotiating process, which included repeated contacts and consultations by the Secretary-General at the highest level with the parties directly concerned and with the permanent members of the Council, and urgent meetings of the Council at the request of the Secretary-General.

349. As stated in the 1989 report:

“Efforts to prevent possible conflicts, reduce the risk of war and achieve definitive settlements of disputes, whether long-standing or new, are part and parcel of a credible strategy for peace.

“The United Nations needs to demonstrate its capacity to function as guardian of the world's security. Neither any alterations in the structure of the Organization nor in the distribution of competence among its respective organs are needed for that purpose. What is needed is an improvement of existing mechanisms and capabilities in the light of the demands of the unfolding international situation.”

In this connection, the Secretary-General stresses the necessity of prevention of international disputes, indicates the priorities for the United Nations and formulates concrete proposals aimed at enhancing its effectiveness in the modern world.

350. The 1989 report contains a number of proposals concerning the procedure of the Security Council, as well as the improvement of its mechanism of work, in dealing with matters of prevention and pacific settlement of disputes and situations. Among the proposals are those suggesting that the Security Council could meet periodically to consider the state of international peace and security in different regions at the level of ministers for foreign affairs and, when appropriate, in closed session, and that “where international friction appears likely”, the Council “could act on its own or request the Secretary-General to exercise his good offices directly or through a special representative”, enlisting, when appropriate, “the cooperation of the concerned regional organization in averting a crisis”.

351. Evaluating the recent positive development of positions of Member States and permanent members of the Council, especially in respect of the role of the United Nations and the Security Council, the Secretary-General mentioned, in particular in his 1989 report, that “the decision-making process on political matters has vastly improved with the emergence of a collegial spirit among the permanent members of the Security Council and with the daily cooperation between the Council as a whole and the Secretary-General". He also noted the special significance of the cooperation between "the two militarily most powerful States" for the purposes of the maintenance of international peace and security for the effectiveness of the efforts of the United Nations in this field. At the same time, the Secretary-General reaffirmed in his 1990 report that "agreement among the major Powers must carry with it the support of a majority of Member States if it is to make the desired impact on the world situation". That is fully applicable to the field of peaceful settlement of disputes between States.

C. The General Assembly

1. Role of the General Assembly in the peaceful settlement of disputes

352. The functions and powers of the General Assembly in the field of prevention and settlement of disputes and situations are specified mainly in Chapter IV of the Charter. Under the various Articles of the Chapter, the Assembly is empowered, inter alia: to discuss any questions or matters within the scope of the Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the Charter, including those relating to the maintenance of international peace and security which have been brought before it by Member States or by the Security Council, and may make recommendations on such questions or matters;⁴⁶² to call the attention of the Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security;⁴⁶³ to consider the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security and make recommendations with regard to such principles;⁴⁶⁴ to initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;⁴⁶⁵ and to recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations.⁴⁶⁶ Some instances in which the General Assembly has exercised these powers and functions in the field of the prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes and situations are outlined below.

(a) Discussion of questions and making recommendations on matters relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes

353. The General Assembly, under Article 10 of the Charter, may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the Charter, or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the Charter, and may make recommendations "to the Members of the United Nations or to the ⁴⁶²See the Charter of the United Nations, Articles 10 and 11, paragraph 2; see also the limitation imposed on the power of the General Assembly to make recommendations by Article 12, paragraph 1.

⁴⁶⁶*Ibid.*, Article 14.

Security Council or to both” on any such questions or matters, “except as provided in Article 12”.⁴⁶⁷ The powers of the Assembly as thus stated in Article 10 include the power to discuss and make recommendations on questions relating to the settlement of disputes. The Charter authorizes the Assembly not only to address directly the States parties involved in a dispute or situation, but also to play an important role in the coordination of the activities of the principal organs of the United Nations in the field of the prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes and situations, but within the limits established by the Charter in Article 12.

354. While the general powers and functions of the Assembly are thus contained in Article 10, they are specified further under Articles 11, 13 and 14, as indicated below.

355. Article 11, paragraph 2, enables the General Assembly to discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it⁴⁶⁸ and to make recommendations with regard to them “to the State or States concerned or to the Security Council or to both”. According to Article 11, paragraph 3, the Assembly may call the attention of the Council to situations “which are likely to endanger international peace and security”. The Assembly has widely exercised these specific powers, adopting a number of resolutions⁴⁶⁹ in which it has made recommendations in the field of the maintenance of international peace and security or drawn the attention of the Security Council to situations considered as endangering, or likely to endanger, international peace and security, and referring to the Council, either before or after discussion, any such question on which action is necessary.

356. This mechanism of distribution of competence between the Security Council and the General Assembly and interaction of the two organs, as envisaged in Article 11, paragraphs 1 to 3, of the Charter, is to be viewed in the light of the broad powers of the General Assembly, under article 10, to perform functions in the field of the maintenance of international peace and ⁴⁶⁷Article 12 of the Charter reads as follows:

“1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

“2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Secretary-General ceases to deal with such matters.”

⁴⁶⁸According to the provisions of Article 11, paragraph 2, any question related to the maintenance of international peace and security may be brought before the General Assembly not only by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, but also by a State which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the Charter, as stated in Article 35, paragraph 2.

⁴⁶⁹See, for instance, General Assembly resolutions 2151 (XXI), para. 6; 2202 A (XXI), para. 7; 2262 (XXII), para. 17; 2270 (XXII), para. 10; 2307 (XXII), para. 4; 2324 (XXII), para. 4; 2383 (XXIII), para. 9; 2395 (XXIII), para. 4; 2396 (XXIII), para. 4; 2403 (XXIII), para. 3; 2498 (XXIV), para. 3; 2506 B (XXIV), para. 9; 2508 (XXIV), paras. 12 and 14; and 2517 (XXIV), para. 4. For more recent examples, see resolutions 43/14, 43/19, 43/24, 43/25, 43/33, 44/10, 44/15, 44/22, 44/88, etc.

security and prevention and pacific settlement of disputes and situations. It is therefore essential to keep in mind Article 11, paragraph 4, which provides that the powers of the General Assembly set forth in the Article "shall not limit the general scope of Article 10".⁴⁷⁰ Besides, any such limitation would have to be lifted by the Security Council itself if it adopted a resolution requesting the General Assembly to make recommendations with respect to a particular dispute or situation.

357. With respect to the distribution of competence between the two organs, it is important to note the procedure under which the General Assembly is to be informed of the matters being dealt with by the Security Council or with which the Council has ceased to deal. This procedure, as provided in Article 12, establishes a system of notification of the activities of the Security Council and the General Assembly in this field in order to avoid unnecessary overlapping of their functions.

358. With respect to the question of the correlation between the primary responsibility of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security and the powers of the General Assembly to discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security and to make recommendations with regard to any such questions, it is necessary to mention, as an example, the establishment by the Assembly, in 1947,⁴⁷¹ of the Interim Committee and the adoption of the "Uniting for peace" resolution.

359. The mandate of the Interim Committee was to assist the General Assembly between its sessions in handling disputes and situations brought to the Assembly, in case the Security Council was unable to take action because of the use of the veto. The Committee was to assist the Assembly in preparing studies and making recommendations for international political cooperation according to Article 11, paragraph 1, and Article 13, paragraph 1 (a), and dealing with disputes or situations.⁴⁷² The General Assembly, for example, took some actions on the basis of the report of the Interim Committee, and in one case addressed a recommendation to the Security Council concerning the possible use of the rapporteur system,⁴⁷³ and decided to revise the 1928 Geneva General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes and to establish a panel for inquiry and conciliation⁴⁷⁴ (which has never been used).

360. Another step in the same direction was the adoption of the "Uniting for peace" resolution, in 1950, which gave rise to one of the most extensive debates on the Charter of the United Nations.⁴⁷⁵ In that resolution (resolution 377 (V) of 3 November 1950), the Assembly:

⁴⁷¹See Official Records of the General Assembly, Second Session, First Committee, 97th meeting, p. 335.

⁴⁷²See General Assembly resolution III (II) of 13 November 1947.

“Resolve[d] that if the Security Council, because of lack of unanimity of the permanent members, fails to exercise its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in any case where there appears to be a threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression, the General Assembly shall consider the matter immediately with a view to making appropriate recommendations to Members for collective measures, including in the case of a breach of the peace or act of aggression the use of armed force when necessary, to maintain or restore international peace and security.”

The resolution also “establishes a Peace Observation Commission . . . which could observe and report on the situation in any area where there exists international tension the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security” and “recommends to the States Members of the United Nations that each member maintain within its national armed forces elements so trained, organized and equipped that they could promptly be made available, in accordance with its constitutional processes, for service as a United Nations unit or units, upon recommendation by the Security Council or the General Assembly”. The resolution further establishes a Collective Measures Committee “to study and make a report to the Security Council and the General Assembly . . . on methods . . . which might be used to maintain and strengthen international peace and security”. There are cases in which the Security Council, in exceptional circumstances, when it has been prevented from exercising its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security owing to the lack of unanimity of its permanent members, has decided to call emergency special sessions of the General Assembly to consider the matter. In one case, the Security Council specifically invoked the “Uniting for peace” resolution,⁴⁷⁶ while in another it did not invoke the resolution as such but applied the same procedure of convening an emergency special session of the General Assembly.⁴⁷⁷

(b) Recommendation of measures for the peaceful adjustment of situations

361. The specific functions of the General Assembly under this heading are described in Article 14 of the Charter. Under that Article, the Assembly has the power to recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment, not only in respect of matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, but also in respect of other matters, and any situations, regardless of origin, “which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations”. The Article was intended to enable the General Assembly to make recommendations for the peaceful adjustment of situations in various areas, such as the self-determination of peoples and human rights.⁴⁷⁸

362. One of the early examples of the application of Article 14 occurred in connection with the question of the treatment of Indians in the Union of South Africa, which was included in the agenda of the first session of the General Assembly on the request of the delegation of India.⁴⁷⁹ This resulted in the adoption by the General Assembly of its resolution 44 (I) of 8 December 1946, entitled "Treatment of Indians in the Union of South Africa", in which the Assembly observed that because of that treatment friendly relations between the two Member States had been impaired and that unless a satisfactory settlement was reached the relations between the States concerned were likely to be further impaired.⁴⁸⁰

2. Recent trends

363. The trends in the practice of the General Assembly, reflected in its recent declarations,⁴⁸¹ clearly indicate an emphasis not only upon removal of disputes and situations likely to endanger international peace and security, but primarily upon their prevention.

364. Like the 1982 Manila Declaration, the 1988 Declaration stresses the importance of the timely prevention of disputes and situations and urges States to consider approaching the relevant organs of the United Nations (including the General Assembly) "in order to obtain advice or recommendations on preventive means for dealing with a dispute or situation" (para. 1 (5)), stressing the need to consider, where appropriate, supporting efforts undertaken at the regional level by the States concerned or by regional arrangements or agencies, to prevent or remove a dispute or situation in the region concerned. This clearly indicates the important role of the General Assembly in providing the interaction between universal and regional systems in the prevention and removal of disputes and situations.

365. Furthermore, the 1988 Declaration attaches special attention also to the promotion of the use of fact-finding, urging the General Assembly in the case when a dispute or situation has been brought before it to consider "including in its recommendations making more use of fact-finding capabilities, in accordance with Article 11 and subject to Article 12 of the Charter" (para. 1 (18)), and calls upon the Assembly to "consider making use of the provisions of the Charter concerning the possibility of requesting the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question” (para. 1 (19)), and thus to contribute to the enhancement of the role of the Court. The 1991 Declaration on Fact-finding also aims at promoting the use of fact-finding by the General Assembly.

It should be noted also that in the effort to encourage States to settle their disputes by peaceful means, the General Assembly adopted a decision on resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations (decision 44/415).

366. The important role of the General Assembly as a principal organ of the United Nations in the field of the prevention and peaceful settlement of international disputes and situations is further indicated in the 1989 and 1990 reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization.⁴⁸² Noting the valuable efforts of the General Assembly in various areas of international relations, including those concerning the promotion of peaceful settlement of disputes, as well as his own activities in the field, in pursuance of the mandate entrusted to him by the Assembly, the Secretary-General has underlined the growing demand for the effective conduct of multilateral diplomacy on the basis of political and moral persuasion, combined with a judicious use of leverage aimed at the settlement of disputes. In this respect, it should be noted that the General Assembly, as the organ in which all Member States are represented, is capable of performing this task on the basis of the multilateral efforts of all the Member States in directing their combined political will, inseparable from their moral responsibility, to undertake the timely prevention and peaceful settlement of international disputes.

D. The Secretariat

1. Role of the Secretary-General

367. The contribution of the Secretariat of the United Nations to the efforts of the Organization in the area of the peaceful settlement of disputes is made primarily through the role of the Secretary-General. Article 97 of the Charter of the United Nations provides that “the Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require” and describes the Secretary-General as “the chief administrative officer of the Organization”. Article 98, however, establishes the duty of the Secretary-General not only to act in that capacity, but also to perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by the other principal organs, which may include those in the field of the prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes. Article 99 gives the Secretary-General more specific powers in connection with the prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes by providing that “the Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security”.

(a) Functions of the Secretary-General in the implementation of the resolutions of other principal organs in the field of the prevention or settlement of disputes

368. The Secretary-General, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and the means at his disposal, renders assistance and provides facilities not only for the other principal organs of the Organization but also for all institutions of the United Nations acting in this field.⁴⁸³ In that connection, and pursuant to Article 98, he performs technical and any other functions as may be requested by the other principal organs directly involved in the prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes.

369. A review of the functions of the Secretary-General in the field of the maintenance of international peace and security and the prevention and settlement of international disputes shows that he has performed manifold actions to implement a vast number of resolutions of other principal organs.⁴⁸⁴ These include, for example, his activities with regard to the situation in the Middle East,⁴⁸⁵ the situation in Cyprus,⁴⁸⁶ the situation between Iran and Iraq,⁴⁸⁷ the situation in Kampuchea,⁴⁸⁸ the situation in Afghanistan,⁴⁸⁹ Western Sahara,⁴⁹⁰ and Central America,⁴⁹¹ and his role in the efforts to settle the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) question⁴⁹² and in the settlement of the question of Namibia.⁴⁹³

370. In performing this function in the course of the prevention or peaceful settlement of disputes, the Secretary-General has either taken certain actions himself, appointed special representatives or requested the assistance of a third State. For example, in April 1965, when fighting broke out in the Dominican Republic, he requested the United States Government to use its good offices to urge the opposing forces to heed the call of the Security Council for a strict cease-fire.⁴⁹⁴ In connection with the complaint by Malta against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (1980), the Secretary-General held consultations with the parties and sent his Special Representative to the countries concerned in order to assist in the search for a mutually acceptable solution.⁴⁹⁵

(b) Diplomatic functions

371. Since the Secretary-General is the chief administrative officer of the Organization, which gives wide-ranging powers to the Charter in the field of peaceful settlement of disputes, it follows naturally that he plays an important role in this process. Such functions include: communications containing démarches and appeals; discussions and consultations with the parties; fact-finding activities; participation in, or assistance to, negotiations aimed at the settlement of a dispute or the implementation of an agreed settlement. All such functions are performed either by him directly or by personal or special representatives appointed by him.⁴⁹⁶

(c) Functions of the Secretary-General based on the powers expressly conferred upon him by the Charter

372. According to Article 98 of the Charter, the Secretary-General "shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization".⁴⁹⁷ The most recent such annual report of the Secretary-General is that submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.⁴⁹⁸ In that document, in addition to presenting a comprehensive review of various activities of the Organization and an evaluation of its work in the field of the maintenance of international peace and security, the Secretary-General also suggests ways and means by which the functions of the Organization may be improved, for example, in the area of the prevention and peaceful settlement of international disputes. Such a reporting system enables the Secretary-General to contribute to the process of achieving the peaceful solution of conflicts or situations in various regions of the world⁴⁹⁹ in the course of implementing the various resolutions of the other principal organs.

373. The competence given to the Secretary-General under Article 99 has been used by him mainly in the sphere of the maintenance of peace and security, rather than in the peaceful settlement of disputes. His functions in the field of the prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes are provided in this Article, under which the Secretary-General "may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security". However, such competence of the Secretary-General has also been used effectively for purposes of the peaceful settlement of disputes. The importance of this competence is underlined by further mention that was given to Article 99 in the 1982 Manila Declaration and in the 1983 annual report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization,⁵⁰⁰ in which he stressed the need “to carry out effectively the preventive role foreseen for the Secretary-General under Article 99”, in order to “inhibit the deterioration of conflict situations” and to assist the parties “in resolving incipient disputes by peaceful means”.

374. The Secretary-General’s activities performed under Article 99 can be illustrated by his actions with regard to the situation between the United States and Iran in 1979 and the situation between Iran and Iraq in 1980.⁵⁰¹ Among the more recent examples is his action in connection with the situation in Lebanon. On 15 August 1989, after an alarming escalation in the military confrontation in and around Beirut, and with the danger of even further involvement of outside parties, the Secretary-General requested the President of the Security Council to convene an urgent meeting of the Council, in view of the serious threat to international peace and security.⁵⁰²

375. The instruments in the field of the peaceful settlement of disputes adopted by the international community recently, reflecting the realities of modern international life, clearly indicate the trend towards enlarging the role of the Secretary-General in the area of the prevention and peaceful settlement of international disputes.

376. As stated, for example, in the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes: “The Secretary-General should make full use of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations concerning the responsibilities entrusted to him” (sect. II, para. 6).

377. The functions of the Secretary-General in this field are also stated in the 1988 Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations:

“20. The Secretary-General, if approached by a State or States directly concerned with a dispute or situation, should respond swiftly by urging the States to seek a solution or adjustment by peaceful means of their own choice under the Charter and by offering his good offices or other means at his disposal, as he deems appropriate;

“21. The Secretary-General should consider approaching the States directly concerned with a dispute or situation in an effort to prevent it from becoming a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security.”

⁵⁰⁰See Official Records of the General Assembly, Thirty-seventh Session, Supplement No. 1 (A/37/1), p. 3.

⁵⁰¹See Official Records of the Security Council, Thirty-fourth Session, Supplement for October, November and December 1979, document S/13646; ibid., Thirty-fifth Session, Supplement for July, August and September 1980, document S/14196.

⁵⁰²See Official Records of the General Assembly, Forty-fourth Session, Supplement No. 1 (A/44/1).

These provisions emphasize the role of the Secretary-General in taking preventive actions in the field of pacific settlement.

378. Both the 1988 and 1991 Declarations encourage the Secretary-General to consider making full use of fact-finding capabilities, including sending, with the consent of the State, a representative or a fact-finding mission to areas where a dispute or a situation exists. The former further encourages him to consider using, at as early a stage as he deems appropriate, the right conferred upon him under Article 99 of the Charter, thus calling the attention of the Security Council to any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security. Moreover, under the 1988 Declaration the Secretary-General is also encouraged to make efforts towards the prevention and removal of disputes or situations at the regional level and to establish an effective mechanism for collaboration between regional agencies and the United Nations in dealing with local disputes or situations.

379. New trends and proposals in connection with the role of the Secretary-General in the area of pacific settlement as well as an evaluation of past and present activities in the field are also reflected in the report submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, in 1989. In particular, the Secretary-General pointed out that the deployment of the United Nations military observers throughout the Central American region could provide a new opportunity to render assistance in the field of pacific settlement and reconciliation; set forth proposals that the Organization receive information from space-based and other technical surveillance systems, thereby enabling the Secretariat to monitor conflict situations impartially; and recommended that the Security Council meet periodically to consider the state of international peace and security in different regions at the level of foreign ministers. He also noted the important role of "fact-finding teams" which might be dispatched to establish "timely, accurate and unbiased information" concerning a situation likely to lead to international friction.

380. Reaffirming the evaluation of recent trends and proposals in the field of peaceful settlement contained in his 1989 report on the work of the Organization, the Secretary-General in his 1990 report specially emphasized the role of the peace-keeping efforts of the United Nations in the context of the peaceful settlement of disputes and situations. In that connection, he pointed out as examples of recent trends both the expansion of the role of the United Nations and the widening United Nations practice of combining peace-keeping and peace-making, noting that recent United Nations operations

"... have so combined elements of peace-keeping and peace-making as to have radically altered traditional concepts of the arrangement between the two. Formerly, peace-keeping was understood to mean essentially to control or contain conflicts while peace-making was meant to resolve them. A deeper and more active involvement of the United Nations has over time, however, increasingly shown that peace-making itself determines, as it should, the size, scope and duration of peace-keeping as conventionally understood and that it is often by a fusion of the two in an integral undertaking that peace can genuinely be brought to troubled areas”.

The report also pointed out that:

“From 1948 onwards, the United Nations has launched 18 operations, five of them during 1988 and 1989. Indeed, in recent years, the Organization’s role in combinations of peace-keeping and peace-making has expanded impressively. The composite nature of these recent operations means that the tasks assigned to them have multiplied. The United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia provides a standing example of important civilian and police components working together with military elements to secure the implementation of a complex peace plan under its supervision and control. The delicate mission accomplished in Nicaragua also illustrated the versatile forms that undertakings assigned to the Secretariat by the competent organs of the United Nations can take.”

381. The Secretary-General also indicated that as the consent of the parties concerned is crucial to the mandate of the United Nations, peace-keeping operations conducted “in order to stop or avert fighting and help facilitate or implement a settlement” are “to be distinguished from measures under Chapter VII of the Charter”. While recognizing the unique and important role of the Secretary-General in the prevention and peaceful settlement of international disputes and situations, it is necessary to emphasize once again that its potential can be used effectively only on the basis of interaction with other principal organs of the United Nations, especially the Security Council and the General Assembly, and under the condition of full support by States.

IV. PROCEDURES ENVISAGED IN OTHER INTERNATIONAL INSTRUMENTS

A. Introduction

382. The international instruments whose procedures for the settlement of disputes are the subject of the present chapter may be divided into two broad categories, as briefly described below.

383. One category consists of the constituent instruments of international organizations of a universal character, such as the specialized agencies of the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), with competence in specific areas of activities. Disputes between any of the States members of such organizations are settled in accordance with the procedures established under the relevant constituent instruments. As further discussed in section B below, certain instruments provide more elaborate procedures for dispute settlement consistent with the degree of interaction of the Member States inter se, as determined by the nature of the activities of the organization. Other constituent instruments do not, by contrast, establish elaborate procedures and mechanisms for dispute settlement apart from the general requirement that disputes which are not settled by direct negotiations or by other diplomatic means should be referred to one of the organs of the organization in question for settlement, and that if no settlement is reached the dispute may be referred to a particular forum for a judicial settlement.

384. The second category consists of the numerous multilateral treaties which regulate the relations between States parties thereto and establish appropriate procedures for the settlement of disputes arising from their interpretation or application.* Depending upon the subject-matter of each multilateral treaty, and as further discussed in section C of the present chapter, the dispute settlement procedures established under such instruments also rely upon the application of the various means of peaceful settlement discussed in chapter II of the handbook.

385. In presenting the materials under the two broad categories of the types of instruments described above, the present chapter aims at providing an analysis of dispute settlement procedures envisaged under the instruments, taking into account those already discussed in the preceding chapters and, where possible, giving examples of cases handled through the procedures in question.

*While for the purposes of the present handbook only multilateral treaties are discussed in the present chapter, a study of the equally large number of bilateral treaties indicates that the types of dispute settlement procedures they contain are fully reflected in those presented here or elsewhere in the handbook.

B. Procedures envisaged in the constituent instruments of international organizations of a universal character other than the United Nations

386. The procedures for the settlement of disputes envisaged under the instruments falling under this category reflect the distinction between the instruments which created economic or financial organizations and those which established organizations with other specific areas of activities and competence.

1. Procedures envisaged in economic and financial organizations

387. The disputes settlement procedures under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and under commodity agreements provide examples of the ways in which some of the specific peaceful means of dispute settlement discussed in chapter II above are adapted to deal with the types of disputes arising within the scope of the activities of the institutions in question.

388. The GATT dispute settlement procedure⁵⁰³ consists of several steps, the first of which is consultations, which are mainly bilateral, although article XXII, paragraph 2, of the General Agreement provides for joint consultations with contracting parties if bilateral consultations do not produce a satisfactory result. Under this system, consultations are undertaken as means of settlement of disputes in itself and are considered a precondition for conciliation as the next procedure established under such international economic organizations.⁵⁰⁴

389. The second step is the referral of the dispute, on the basis of article XXIII, paragraph 2, of the Agreement, to the Contracting Parties⁵⁰⁵ for conciliation. A party to a dispute may request the setting up of a panel or working party. In practice, recourse to panels has become the usual procedure (see paras. 392-395).

390. Recourse to this conciliation procedure is limited to cases where a contracting party considers "that any benefit accruing to it directly or indirectly under th[e] Agreement is being nullified or impaired".⁵⁰⁶ Nullifi-

⁵⁰³This procedure is essentially based on articles XXII and XXIII of the Agreement (Basic Instruments and Selected Documents, vol. IV, March 1969) as well as in the following subsequent documents, which formalized the dispute settlement procedures that had evolved through GATT customary practice: "Understanding regarding notification, consultation, dispute settlement and surveillance", adopted on 28 November 1979 (hereinafter "1979 Understanding"), to which is annexed an "Agreed description of the customary practice of the GATT in the field of dispute settlement"; GATT, BISD, 26th Supp. (1980), pp. 210-218; "Special régime for disputes in which the plaintiff is a developing country", adopted on 5 April 1966 (GATT, BISD, Doc., 14th Suppl. (1966), pp. 18-20, which provides for the expedited treatment of complaints brought by developing countries; Special régimes provided for in some of the non-tariff agreements or Codes concluded during the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations of 1973-1979 which differ slightly from the 1979 Understanding: under the Codes, parties have an explicit right to panel procedures and certain Codes establish stricter deadlines; finally, the 1982 GATT Ministerial Declaration (GATT, BISD, 29th Suppl., 9, pp. 13-16) provides for certain ways of expediting the process.

⁵⁰⁶Article XXIII of the Agreement.

cation or impairment of benefits is presumed in cases where there is a breach of obligations under the General Agreement. In the absence of such a breach, the party claiming nullification or impairment of benefit is called upon to provide detailed justification of such a claim.⁵⁰⁷

391. The 1982 Ministerial Declaration provides that before the matter is referred to the Contracting Parties and without prejudice of the right of the parties to do so, the latter can seek the good offices of the Director-General of GATT to facilitate a confidential conciliation.⁵⁰⁸

392. Although the establishment of a panel is not an automatic right of the requesting party,⁵⁰⁹ it has never been refused. Panels are composed of three to five members, preferably governmental representatives, but serving in their individual capacity. As opposed to traditional conciliation commissions in the political field, all panelists are chosen by a third party—in this case the Director-General of GATT. They may not be nationals of a party to the dispute.⁵¹⁰

393. Paragraph 16 of the 1979 Understanding describes the functions of panels as follows:

“[T]o assist the Contracting Parties in discharging their responsibilities under Article XXIII; accordingly, a panel should make an objective assessment of the matters before it, including an objective assessment of the facts of the case and the applicability of and conformity with the General Agreement . . . panels should consult regularly with the parties to the dispute and give them adequate opportunity to develop a mutually satisfactory solution.”

394. As is the case with traditional conciliation, the function of the panel thus emphasizes the elements of inquiry, in order to establish the facts giving rise to a dispute and to seek a settlement. The main concern of the whole dispute settlement procedure of GATT, including the panels, as has been repeatedly pointed out, is to reach a settlement agreed by the parties. The requirement that the conclusions of the panel be distributed to the parties to the dispute before circulation to the Contracting Parties is one more evidence of the effort “to encourage development of mutually satisfactory solutions between the parties”⁵¹¹ to the dispute.

395. The GATT Council usually adopts the panel’s report as submitted, thereby giving the recommendations contained therein an authoritative character, in the form of recommendations or rulings. The following are examples of recently established panels: a panel established in 1973 on a matter referred by the European Communities relating to United States tax legislation;⁵¹² one established in 1973 on a matter referred by the United States relating to income tax practices maintained by the Netherlands;⁵¹³ in 1978, on a matter referred by Australia relating to sugar practices of the European Communities (EC);⁵¹⁴ in 1985, on a matter referred by EC relating to Canadian discriminatory measures against imported alcoholic drinks;⁵¹⁵ in 1986, on a matter referred by Canada, EC and Mexico relating to taxes levied on petroleum and certain imported substances by the United States;⁵¹⁶ in 1986, on a matter referred by the United States regarding restrictions on imports of certain agricultural products by Japan;⁵¹⁷ in 1986, on a matter referred by EC relating to the Japanese tax system on imported wine and spirits;⁵¹⁸ in 1987, on a matter referred by the United States relating to export restrictions on fish by Canada;⁵¹⁹ and in 1987, on a matter referred by EC and Canada relating to United States import processing fees.⁵²⁰ The duration of the proceedings has varied in these cases from a few months to three years.

396. Although article XXIII, paragraph 2, provides for retaliatory measures if the recommendations are not implemented,⁵²¹ there has been in the entire history of GATT only one case of such sanction, namely, a 1952 dispute between the Netherlands and the United States regarding the latter's quotas for dairy products.⁵²² In practice, any matter in which recommendations have been made or rulings given is kept "under surveillance" by the Contracting Parties, which periodically review the action taken pursuant to such recommendations and may be asked to "make suitable efforts with a view to finding an appropriate solution".⁵²³

397. This conciliation procedure and its sanction (permissible retaliation) is operative mostly in cases where both parties have similar economic strength, and therefore similar potential retaliatory powers.⁵²⁴ Mindful of conditions of economic disequilibrium between States, a special regime for disputes in which the plaintiff is a developing country was adopted in 1966.⁵²⁵ Although the special regime never functioned as such, the 1979 Understanding reinforces it and elaborates on its principles. The main differences between it and the "regular" procedures are that throughout the phases of the dispute settlement process particular attention is to be paid to the interests of less developed countries;⁵²⁶ and that more attention is to be given to enforcement of the recommendations, so that action may be taken, as appropriate, against the non-complying developed party.⁵²⁷

398. The dispute settlement clauses of commodity agreements⁵²⁸ are similar to those of GATT in that they also provide for a step-by-step procedure, beginning with consultations or negotiations between the parties to the dispute. Upon failure of such mode of settlement, the matter is then referred to the council of the organization (which is a plenary organ) established by the respective commodity agreements. The council takes a binding decision on the matter, in most cases after having sought the opinion of an advisory panel. Unless the Council decides otherwise, advisory panels usually consist of five persons acting in their personal capacity as follows: two members nominated by the exporting members, two by the importing members and a chairman selected either by the other four members or, if they fail to agree, by the chairman of the council. For example, in 1965 an advisory panel was set up by the International Coffee Organization (under the 1962 Coffee Agreement) to interpret certain provisions of the Agreement.⁵²⁹ An advisory panel was also set up in 1969, under the 1968 Agreement relating to a dispute between Brazil and the United States on processed coffee.⁵³⁰

399. Enforcement provisions are also contained in the Agreement. The council, if it establishes that a member has committed a breach of the Agreement, may suspend the rights of that member, including voting rights, or even under certain conditions may exclude that member from the organization. As in the case of GATT, however, such sanctions have not been used in practice.

400. The constitutions of the specialized agencies of the United Nations with financial and economic activities and of certain regional institutions all provide for the same dispute settlement mechanism for any question of interpretation of these treaties arising between any members of the organization or between a member and the organization.⁵³¹ Such disputes are

In any case where the organ has given such a decision, any member may require that the question be referred to the plenary organ, whose decision shall be final.⁵³² It is further provided that disputes between the organization and a former member shall be submitted to arbitration.

401. As is the case with the above-mentioned trade organizations, sanctions are also envisaged. A State member of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the International Development Association (IDA), the International Finance Corporation (IFC) or the International Fund for Agriculture and Development (IFAD) that does not fulfil its obligations under any of the respective Agreements may be suspended from membership by the plenary organ.⁵³³ A State member of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) which fails to fulfil its obligations under the Agreement may be declared ineligible to use the resources of the Fund or may be required to withdraw from the Fund.⁵³⁴

402. In order to provide an international forum for the settlement of investment disputes between a State and nationals of another State, apart from those available through the customary law of diplomatic protection, there was established in 1966,⁵³⁵ under the auspices of the World Bank, the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID).⁵³⁶ The Centre provides facilities for the conciliation and arbitration of "any legal dispute arising directly out of an investment, between a Contracting State [. . .] and a national of another Contracting State".⁵³⁷ The Centre does not itself act as conciliator or arbitrator: disputes are referred to conciliation commissions or arbitral tribunals constituted under ICSID's auspices. To that effect, ICSID maintains a Panel of Conciliators and a Panel of Arbitrators,⁵³⁸ but conciliators and arbitrators may be appointed from outside the panel. Recourse to ICSID conciliation or arbitration is voluntary and based on the consent of the parties. The mere fact that a State is party to the ICSID Convention does not obligate that State to submit a particular dispute to ICSID.⁵³⁹

403. Conciliation has been used only twice since the establishment of ICSID. In one case (SEDITEX v. Madagascar), the proceedings were discontinued before the establishment of a commission; a commission was established in the case Tesoro v. Trinidad and Tobago and its recommendations accepted by the parties in 1985.⁵⁴⁰ Recommendations of conciliation commissions are, as usual, not binding.

404. Parties have more frequent recourse to arbitration. Nevertheless, a high proportion of cases has been settled by the parties directly rather than through an arbitral award. The most recent arbitrations include: Klockner/Cameroun case⁵⁴¹ of 26 January 1988 and Société Ouest Africaine des Bétons Industriels v. Senegal of 25 February 1988.⁵⁴² Although awards are binding, requests for interpretation, revision and even annulment are considered under certain circumstances.⁵⁴³

405. Part XI of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea⁵⁴⁴ establishes the International Sea-Bed Authority which, with respect to activities in the Area, is a specialized international organization of economic scope, albeit different from the other organizations mentioned above. Disputes with respect to activities in the Area under part XI of the Law of the Sea Convention are settled according to a specific system,⁵⁴⁵ distinguishable from those established for the settlement of disputes concerning other parts of the Convention.⁵⁴⁶

406. Disputes between States Parties arising from the conduct of activities in the international sea-bed area may be submitted either to a special chamber of the International Tribunal for Law of the Sea by mutual consent of all parties to the dispute or, at the request of any party to the dispute, to an ad hoc chamber of the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber of the Tribunal. Moreover, certain categories of disputes between a State Party and the Sea-Bed Authority or between the Authority and a State enterprise or a natural or juridical person sponsored by a State Party in conformity with the Convention may also be referred to the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber.⁵⁴⁷ As for disputes concerning the interpretation or application of a contract under part XI, they shall be submitted, at the request of any party to the dispute and unless otherwise agreed, to binding commercial arbitration. In the latter case, if questions of interpretation of part XI arise, the arbitral tribunal shall refer such questions to the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber for a binding ruling. It is also worth mentioning that the Assembly or the Council of the Authority may request advisory opinions from the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

2. Procedures envisaged in the constitutions of other international organizations with specialized activities

407. The constitutive treaties of other specialized agencies of the United Nations as well as of the International Atomic Energy Agency contain provisions on the settlement of disputes relating to the application or interpretation of the respective texts. The general procedure⁵⁴⁸ is as follows: if the matter is not settled by negotiations, it is referred to one of the main organs of the organization. Failing its settlement by that organ, the dispute is further referred to the International Court of Justice or to an arbitral tribunal, unless it is otherwise agreed.⁵⁴⁹ The latter part of the procedure has never been used in practice, given the fact that the scope of activities of these specialized agencies does not give rise to serious disputes between them and their members or between the members inter se. Thus the bulk of disagreements which have arisen have been mostly settled by negotiation.⁵⁵⁰

⁵⁴⁸This paragraph does not apply to the cases of the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Labour Organisation, which will be discussed below (paras. 409-417).

⁵⁴⁹See, e.g., article XVII of the Constitution of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) (arbitration is not expressly mentioned as a mode of settlement, only referral to ICJ) (FAO, Basic Texts, vol. 1); article XIV, para. 2, of the Constitution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 4, p. 275); article 22, para. 1, of the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) (which also provides for referral to a conciliation commission (United Nations registration No. 23432); article 75 of the Constitution of the World Health Organization (WHO) (arbitration is not expressly mentioned, only referral to ICJ) (ibid., vol. 14, p. 186); articles 65 and 66 of the Convention on the International Maritime Organization (IMO) (referral to ICJ is expressly envisaged only in the form of a request for advisory opinion) (IMCO, Basic Documents, vol. I, 1979, p. 5 and IMCO Assembly Resolution A.358 (IX) of 14 November 1975); article XVII, para. (A) of the Statute of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) (ibid., vol. 276, p. 3); article 29 of the Convention of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) (referral to ICJ is not expressly provided for, only arbitration) (ibid., vol. 77, p. 143); articles 50 and 82 of the Convention of the International Telecommunications Union (ITU) (referral to ICJ is not expressly provided for, only arbitration) (United Nations registration No. 19497).

⁵⁵⁰Dispute settlement provisions are also incorporated in agreements concluded under the auspices of these organizations. For example, FAO agreements provide for conciliation, arbitration or referral to ICJ; certain agreements provide for the appointment by the Director General of FAO of a committee of experts whose recommendations are not binding (no such provision has been used in practice); the UNESCO Convention against Discrimination in Education is supplemented by a Protocol instituting a Conciliation and Good Offices Commission to be responsible for seeking the settlement of disputes which may arise between States Parties to the Convention (Protocol adopted on 10 December 1962); IMO Conventions usually provide for arbitration or judicial settlement if negotiations fail; dispute settlement provisions also exist in agreements to which an international organization is a party: for example, the Agreement on Safeguards under the Non-Proliferation Treaty of 5 April 1973 (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 1043, p. 213) between the European Atomic Energy Community (EURATOM), the seven European States and IAEA provides, in the case of disputes, for consultations, referral to the Board of IAEA and to arbitration.

408. In the majority of these treaties, it is furthermore provided that the organization may under certain conditions request of the International Court of Justice an advisory opinion on any legal question arising within the scope of its activities.⁵⁵¹ This procedure has been followed in two instances: regarding the interpretation of a provision of the Convention on the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (now the International Maritime Organization)⁵⁵² and regarding the interpretation of an agreement between the World Health Organization and a member State.⁵⁵³

409. The International Civil Aviation Organization has a somewhat different mechanism for the peaceful settlement of disputes relating to the interpretation or application of the ICAO Convention.⁵⁵⁴ Negotiations between the parties to the dispute are the first step of the dispute settlement. Upon the failure of negotiations, the matter is referred to the ICAO Council for decision. The procedure before the Council consists of written and oral parts. The Council may ask the Secretary-General of ICAO to institute an investigation to determine the facts relating to a dispute.⁵⁵⁵ In contrast to constitutions of other specialized agencies which provide for direct referral to the International Court of Justice (ICJ) or arbitration if the dispute is not settled by the competent organ,⁵⁵⁶ in the case of ICAO referral to the International Court of Justice or an arbitral tribunal is made in the form of an appeal of the Council's decision.⁵⁵⁷ Sanctions for failure to conform with the Council's decisions are also envisaged. Thus, defaulting airlines are not allowed to operate through the airspace of contracting States; and the voting powers of a defaulting State may be suspended by the ICAO Assembly.⁵⁵⁸

410. In the history of ICAO, three disputes have been explicitly submitted to the Council for resolution under chapter XVIII of the Chicago Convention relating to the settlement of disputes: a complaint by India against

⁵⁵⁷Article 85 of the ICAO Convention contains details on the establishment of such an arbitral tribunal.

⁵⁵⁸Two ICAO Conventions, the International Air Services Transit Agreement of 7 December 1944 (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 84, p. 389) and the International Air Transport Agreement of 7 December 1944 (ibid., vol. 171, p. 387) stipulate that chapter XVIII of the ICAO Convention is applicable with respect to disputes or the interpretation and application of these texts. Furthermore, numerous bilateral agreements between States relating to air services provide for the settlement of disputes or by a decision of the ICAO Council, through arbitration or judicial settlement. In practice, arbitration has been the procedure to which parties in dispute have resorted. See chap. II, sect. F ("Arbitration") above, note 107, as well as a 1981 dispute between Belgium and Ireland (not yet published).

Pakistan in 1952,⁵⁵⁹ a complaint by the United Kingdom against Spain in 1969⁵⁶⁰ and a complaint by Pakistan against India in 1971.⁵⁶¹ In those cases, the Council did not issue a decision on the merits, since the dispute was settled by the parties while the proceedings before the Council were still pending. Such an outcome is actually encouraged by the Council itself.⁵⁶² The procedure of appeal to the International Court of Justice under chapter XVIII of the Chicago Convention also has been used; e.g., India appealed during the 1971 dispute with Pakistan.⁵⁶³ There has also been a case of resort to the International Court of Justice by the Islamic Republic of Iran, which filed an application instituting proceedings against the United States of America⁵⁶⁴ with a view to appealing the decision rendered on 17 March 1989 by the ICAO Council.⁵⁶⁵

411. The scope of activities of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) also calls for a more elaborate dispute settlement procedure because of potential disputes arising from the conduct of States towards individuals in their territories, including their own nationals, in connection with the application of specific ILO Conventions. The ILO Constitution contains a general provision that disputes relating to its interpretation or to the interpretation of Conventions concluded under it shall be referred to the International Court of Justice⁵⁶⁶ and does not envisage a non-judicial procedure for that purpose.

412. Under articles 24 and 25 of the ILO Constitution, any organization of either workers or employers may make a representation with the International Labour Office alleging that a member State has failed to observe any part of the ILO Convention to which it is a party.⁵⁶⁷ The Government may be invited by the ILO Governing Body to respond to the allegation. If a response is either not received or, if received, is not deemed to be satisfactory by the Governing Body, the latter may publish the representation and any responses relating thereto. The most recent cases include: a 1985 representation by the Japanese Trade Unions alleging non-observance by Japan of the Fee-charging Employment Agencies Convention;⁵⁶⁸ a 1985 representation by the National Trade Union Coordinating Council of Chile alleging non-observance of certain international labour conventions by Chile;⁵⁶⁹ a 1986

413. A more developed procedure is established under article 26 of the ILO Constitution relating to disputes between States. According to paragraph 1 of the article:

“Any of the Members shall have the right to file a complaint with the International Labour Office if it is not satisfied that any other Member is securing the effective observance of any Convention which both have ratified in accordance with the foregoing articles.”

The procedure, which can also be set in motion by the Governing Body itself, is as follows.⁵⁷² The Governing Body may first communicate the complaint to the Government concerned. If no such communication was made or no satisfactory response was received from the Government, the Governing Body may appoint a commission of inquiry to consider the complaint. All members of ILO undertake to cooperate with such a commission. The latter adopts a report containing its recommendations; the report is communicated to the Governing Body and the Governments concerned, and is published. Governments have a three-month limit within which to inform the Director-General of ILO of their acceptance or refusal of the commission's recommendations. In the latter case, they may refer the matter to ICJ for a final decision. If a member fails to carry out the recommendations of the commission or the decision of the Court, the organization may take “such action as it may deem wise and expedient to secure compliance therewith”.

414. In practice, the complaint procedure has been used on relatively few occasions. Commissions of inquiry have been established to examine some of these complaints, the most recent of which include: a 1981 complaint relating to observance of certain international labour conventions by the Dominican Republic and Haiti;⁵⁷³ a 1982 complaint relating to the observance by Poland of certain international labour conventions;⁵⁷⁴ and a 1984 complaint relating to the observance of the Discrimination Convention by the Federal Republic of Germany.⁵⁷⁵

415. Apart from the above-mentioned procedure, a special machinery has been established for the examination of complaints of the violation of trade union rights.⁵⁷⁶ Such complaints can be examined, regardless of whether the State concerned has ratified the Freedom of Association Conventions, by two specially established bodies: the Governing Body Committee on Freedom of Association and the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association.

416. The Committee,⁵⁷⁷ a tripartite body of nine independent members from the ILO Governing Body, examines complaints even without the consent of the State concerned. Since its establishment in 1951 it has considered over a thousand cases.⁵⁷⁸ The complaint is communicated to the Government concerned, which may be requested to provide further information. The Committee conducts hearings and undertakes on-site visits. Its task is mainly to consider whether cases are worthy of examination by the Governing Body and to make recommendations thereon to the Governing Body. The reports of the Committee are published.

417. The Committee may recommend the referral of the matter to the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission. The latter, composed of independent persons appointed by the Governing Body, can only consider a case with the consent of the Government concerned. As opposed to the Committee, the Commission conducts hearings in the presence of the parties to the dispute. The Commission also conducts on-site visits. The report of the Commission, as is usual for conciliation commissions, contains both factual findings and recommendations for the solution of the problem. It is also published. In practice, only five cases have been referred to the Commission: concerning Japan, Greece, Chile, Lesotho and the United States (Puerto Rico).⁵⁷⁹

C. Procedures envisaged in multilateral treaties creating no permanent institutions

418. Multilateral treaties (excluding those of a regional or subregional scope) may be classified as follows on the basis of the types of procedures they provide for the settlement of disputes: (1) those establishing optional procedures;⁵⁸⁰ (2) those establishing, under the treaty itself, combined non-compulsory and compulsory procedures in which both the International Court of Justice and an arbitral tribunal are offered as choices for judicial ⁵⁷⁷The detailed procedure of the preliminary examination of complaints by the Committee is to be found in International Labour Office, Procedure for the examination of complaints alleging infringements of trade union rights, June 1985.

⁵⁷⁸In 1988, the Committee considered complaints against Peru, Ecuador, the United States, Colombia, Portugal, Spain, Venezuela, the Dominican Republic, Denmark, Brazil, Australia, Chile, Paraguay, Haiti, Uruguay, Zambia, Bahrain, Fiji and Nicaragua. See ILO Official Bulletin, vol. LXXI, 1988, Series B, No. 1 (254th and 255th reports of the Committee on Freedom of Association).

⁵⁷⁹*ILO Official Bulletin*, vol. XLIX, 1966, No. 1, Special supplement, ibid., No. 3, Special Supplement; The Trade Union Situation in Chile: report of the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association. ILO document GB197/3/5 and GB218/7/2. In the case of Greece, the complaint was withdrawn while the proceedings were still pending.

settlement;⁵⁸¹ (3) those establishing a combined procedure in which ICJ is the only compulsory judicial settlement procedure provided; (4) those in which arbitration is the only compulsory procedure for judicial settlement; (5) those in which conciliation is the only third-party compulsory procedure; (6) those which combine adjudication and conciliation as third-party compulsory procedures; and (7) those which rely on panels of experts for resolving technical disputes.

1. Conventions containing optional procedures for dispute settlement

419. Certain multilateral conventions establish a dispute settlement procedure in a separate optional protocol. Thus the procedure is only binding between parties to the dispute which are also parties to the optional protocol. Seven conventions⁵⁸² concluded under the auspices of the United Nations after consideration by the International Law Commission, envisage the following procedure in an optional protocol: any dispute arising out of the interpretation or application of any of the conventions may be brought before ICJ by unilateral request. However, the parties to the dispute may agree before bringing the dispute to ICJ, and within a period of two months, to resort to arbitration or to adopt a conciliation procedure. In the latter case, the conciliation commission shall make its recommendations within five months after its appointment. If they are not accepted by the parties to the dispute within two months, either party may bring the dispute before ICJ.

420. Another type of optional procedure is contained in several human rights conventions, which set up a committee to, inter alia, consider claims by a State Party that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention.⁵⁸³ The procedure is optional in that, although it is an integral part of the treaty in question, it is subject to a declaration of acceptance by both the respondent and the claimant State Party.⁵⁸⁴ The procedure is as ⁵⁸¹This group, like those classified under (3) to (7), share the common characteristic of being procedures established as integral parts of the multilateral treaties themselves, in contrast to the first group described above in note 580.

⁵⁸²Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone of 29 April 1958; the Convention on the High Seas of 29 April 1958; Convention on Fishing and Conservation of the Living Resources of the High Seas of 29 April 1958; Convention on the Continental Shelf of 29 April 1958 (the same optional protocol for Compulsory Settlement of Disputes applies to all the above Conventions, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 450, p. 169); Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 18 April 1961 (ibid., vol. 500, p. 241); Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 24 April 1963 (ibid., vol. 596, p. 487) and Convention on Special Missions of 8 December 1969 (General Assembly resolution 2530 (XXIV) of 8 December 1969, annex).

⁵⁸³International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of 16 December 1966 (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 999, p. 171, arts. 41 and 42); International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (arts. 11-13); Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (art. 21). The International Convention against Apartheid in Sports (art. 13) does not spell out the details of the procedure under which "the Commission may decide on the appropriate measures to be taken in respect of breaches". A similar optional procedure is established in the field of humanitarian law, namely, under the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I) (art. 90 on the International Fact-Finding Commission) (A/32/144, annex I).

⁵⁸⁴Except the International Convention on Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

follows: the committee first makes its good offices available to the parties concerned in order to reach an amicable solution. The committee may also appoint an ad hoc conciliation commission. A report on the matter is then submitted, which is communicated to the parties to the dispute.

421. Moreover, a procedure for examination by the committee of claims by individuals subject to the jurisdiction of a State Party is also provided for in these treaties, on the condition of the acceptance of the procedure by the State party concerned,⁵⁸⁵ either by declaration or by becoming party to an optional protocol.

2. Conventions containing non-compulsory and compulsory procedures in which both the International Court of Justice and an arbitral tribunal are established as choices for judicial settlement

422. A number of multilateral treaties provide the parties to a dispute arising out of the interpretation or application of the respective conventions with a choice of any of the peaceful means of dispute settlement described in chapter II above. In this case, parties to the dispute are usually called upon first to try to resolve their dispute by negotiation, then by use or intervention of a third party (for good offices mediation, conciliation, inquiry) and then, failing the resolution of the dispute, by referral to arbitration or to the International Court of Justice,⁵⁸⁶ the latter two methods being put on the same level. A variation of such a type of clause⁵⁸⁷ envisages unilateral referral of the dispute to ICJ, if it cannot be settled by other means, including arbitration. The Court is thus the only means of last resort for the settlement of the dispute. There is yet another type of dispute settlement clause which provides for referral to ICJ if arbitration fails, but limits the choice of non-judicial means to negotiations. It is a standard clause in many treaties⁵⁸⁸ and reads as follows:

“ 1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of the present Convention which is not settled by negotiation shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If, within six months from the date of the request for arbitration, the parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in conformity with the Statute of the Court.

⁵⁸⁶See, e.g., the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal of 22 March 1989 (International Legal Materials (1989), p. 675, art. 20), which also provides for optional declarations of acceptance of compulsory recourse to arbitration and/or ICJ. See also Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident of 26 September 1986 (ibid. (1986), p. 137, art. 11) and the Convention on the Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency of 26 September 1986 (ibid. (1986), p. 1384, art. 13), which provide that recourse will be had to arbitration or ICJ at the request of any party to the dispute if the latter is not settled within one year from the request for consultation. But States may declare themselves not bound by the provision concerning referral to arbitration or to ICJ.

⁵⁸⁷See, e.g., Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 21 February 1971 (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 1019, p. 175, art. 31); United Nations Convention Against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 19 December 1988 (art. 32) (E/CONF.82/15 and Corr.2), although States may declare themselves not bound by the provision concerning unilateral referral to ICJ.

“2. Each State Party may, at the time of signature or ratification of the present Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 1 of this article with respect to any State Party which has made such a reservation.

“3. Any State Party which has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.”

3. Conventions in which resort to the International Court of Justice is the only compulsory judicial settlement procedure

423. Several international conventions provide that disputes between States Parties arising out of the interpretation or application of those treaties shall be referred to ICJ, at the request of any party to the dispute, unless the dispute can be settled otherwise.⁵⁸⁹ However, the application of this procedure is often subject to reservations by certain States Parties to the conventions

Board Aircraft of 14 September 1963 (art. 24): the only difference with the standard clause is that withdrawal of the reservation is notified to ICAO (ibid., vol. 704, p. 220); Convention on the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft of 16 December 1970 (ibid., vol. 860, p. 106, art. 12); Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Civil Aviation of 23 September 1971 (ibid., vol. 974, p. 178, art. 14); Convention to Discourage Acts of Violence Against Civil Aviation of 23 September 1971: the withdrawal of reservations is notified to depositary Governments (International Legal Materials (1971), p. 1151, art. 14); Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons including Diplomatic Agents of 14 December 1973 (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 1035, p. 168, art. 13); International Convention against the Taking of Hostages of 17 December 1979 (General Assembly resolution 34/146, annex, art. 16); Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation (IMO document SUA/CON/15, art. 16); Convention on the Making of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection of 1 March 1991: the withdrawal of reservation is notified to ICAO (S/22393, article XI). ⁵⁸⁹See, e.g., the following human rights conventions: Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 9 December 1948 (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 78, p. 277, art. 1X); Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 2 December 1949 (ibid., vol. 96, p. 271, art. 22); Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of 28 July 1951 (ibid., vol. 189, p. 137, art. 38); Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons of 28 September 1954 (ibid., vol. 360, p. 117, art. 34); International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination of 21 December 1965 (ibid., vol. 660, p. 195, art. 22). insisting that mutual consent of the parties to the dispute is necessary for referral of the dispute to ICJ.⁵⁹⁰

424. Other conventions provide that disputes which have not been settled by negotiation shall be referred to the International Court of Justice by mutual consent, unless another mode of settlement is agreed to by the parties.⁵⁹¹

4. Conventions in which arbitration is the only compulsory procedure for judicial settlement

425. A number of multilateral treaties provide for arbitration as the only judicial means for the peaceful settlement of disputes (if negotiations are unsuccessful). Thus, certain treaties provide that any dispute concerning the interpretation or application of the respective convention, which cannot be settled through negotiation, and unless the parties otherwise agree, shall be submitted to arbitration at the request of one of the parties.⁵⁹² Others provide for the referral of a dispute to arbitration by mutual consent if no settlement is reached through negotiation or any other peaceful means of the choice of the parties.⁵⁹³ A variation of the latter envisages, in addition, a system of unilateral declarations of recognition of compulsory recourse to arbitration by a State vis-à-vis another State which has made a similar declaration.⁵⁹⁴

⁵⁹⁰For reservations to certain human rights conventions mentioned in note 578 above, see Multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General (United Nations publication, Sales No. E.89.V.3), pp. 97-114, 289-291. Moreover, there are treaties which expressly provide for the possibility of making reservations regarding the unilateral referral of a dispute to the Court, e.g.: Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works revised on 14 July 1967 (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 828, p. 275, art. 33); Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property revised on 14 July 1967 (ibid., vol. 828, p. 365, art. 28).

⁵⁹¹See, e.g., International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid of 30 November 1973 (ibid., vol. 1015, p. 244, art. XI1); International Convention against Apartheid in Sports of 10 December 1985 (General Assembly resolution 40/64 G, annex, art. 19); Antarctic Treaty of 1 December 1959 (United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 402, p. 71, art. XI).

⁵⁹³See, e.g., Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals of 23 June 1979 (International Legal Materials (1980), p. 26, art. XIII). It is worth mentioning that certain regional conventions also contain such a clause; see, e.g., Convention for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea against Pollution of 16 February 1976 (ibid. (1976), p. 296, art. 22); Convention for the Cooperation in the Protection and Development of Marine and Coastal Environment of the West and Central African Regions of 23 March 1981 (International Legal Materials (1981), p. 754, art. 24); the Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region of 24 March 1983 (ibid. (1984), p. 234, art. 23).

⁵⁹⁴See, e.g., the two conventions of 1976 and 1983 on protection of regional seas mentioned in note 593 above.

5. Conventions in which conciliation is the only third-party compulsory procedure

426. There are three conventions concluded under the auspices of the United Nations after consideration by ILC which fall into this category, namely, the two conventions on the succession of States⁵⁹⁵ and the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character of 14 March 1975.⁵⁹⁶ They provide for the following procedure: the parties to a dispute have a certain time period in which to resolve the dispute by negotiation or consultation; after this period, any party may submit it to the conciliation procedure specified in the Convention or an annex to it, unless the parties otherwise agree.

6. Conventions combining adjudication and conciliation as compulsory procedures

427. There are various types of such combinations. The law-of-treaties conventions⁵⁹⁷ provide for the following mechanism: the parties to the dispute have 12 months to try to settle it by any means of their choice. After that date, if the dispute involves the relation between a treaty and a peremptory norm of international law (jus cogens), any State party may unilaterally submit the dispute to ICJ;⁵⁹⁸ unless the parties agree by common consent to submit it to arbitration. If the dispute relates to any other matter, any party to it may set in motion a conciliation procedure, the details of which are spelt out in an annex to each of these Conventions.

428. The 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea also provides for such a combination of compulsory procedures.⁵⁹⁹ In part XV of the Convention, the following dispute settlement system is established under section 1 (non-compulsory procedures) and sections 2 and 3 (compulsory procedures). Parties to a dispute concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention shall under section I of part XV first "proceed expeditiously to an exchange of views regarding its settlement by negotiation or other peaceful means".⁶⁰⁰ If a settlement is not reached, then recourse to the compulsory sections of part XV shall be had, depending upon the category of dispute in question, as provided in article 286. Thus for disputes for which ⁵⁹⁸If an international organization is a party to the dispute, any party to the dispute may request, through the appropriate organs of the United Nations or of an international organization authorized to do so, an advisory opinion of ICJ. Such an advisory opinion shall be accepted as decisive by all the parties.

compulsory judicial procedures are envisaged, i.e., environmental disputes and disputes arising from the exercise of certain freedoms and rights and other uses of the sea, parties have four choices of forums for such settlement,⁶⁰¹ namely: the International Court of Justice, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, an arbitral tribunal established under annex VII of the Convention and a special arbitral tribunal established under annex VIII.⁶⁰² Parties have to make declarations conferring jurisdiction to one or more of these forums.⁶⁰³ If a dispute arises between States which have conferred jurisdiction to the same forum, the dispute is to be submitted to that forum. If a dispute arises between parties that have conferred jurisdiction to different forums, the dispute shall be submitted to arbitration under annex VII. Also, where a dispute is between a State which has made a declaration on the choice of a forum and another State which has made no declaration, such a dispute shall be referred to arbitration under annex VII. Further, where a dispute arises between States with declarations that are found not to be operative at the time of the dispute, it will be referred for settlement by arbitration under annex VII. Thus, under this system, arbitration under annex VII is assigned a special role.⁶⁰⁴ However, for disputes relating to the exercise by coastal States of their rights concerning the management of living resources within the exclusive economic zone and to boundary delimitation, compulsory resort to conciliation is the established third-party procedure under annex V, section 2, of the Convention.

429. Another example in this category is the Convention Relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties of 29 November 1969,⁶⁰⁵ which provides for recourse to conciliation and, if conciliation fails, to arbitration.

7. Conventions which rely on panels of experts for resolving technical disputes

430. In accordance with the procedure described in paragraph 425 above, parties to a technical dispute concerning the interpretation or application of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea relating to four special fields—namely, fisheries, protection and preservation of the

⁶⁰³So far, 12 States have made declarations under article 287, 6 upon signature and 6 upon ratification. Four declarations provide for referral to arbitration under Annex VII, to arbitration under Annex VIII or to the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, depending upon the nature of the dispute. One declaration provides for referral to special arbitration under Annex VIII or to the Tribunal or to ICJ. Two declarations confer jurisdiction upon either the Tribunal or ICJ. Two declarations confer jurisdiction upon the Tribunal only. One declaration provides for arbitration under Annex VII only.

⁶⁰⁴Such a residual role is also given to arbitration by the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities of 2 June 1988 (International Legal Materials (1988), p. 894, arts. 56 and 57), which does not however establish conciliation as a predominant procedure. There is a variation of such a system of residual means of settlement in case of conflicting or non-existing declarations which assigns this role to conciliation; see, e.g., the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer of 22 March 1985 (ibid., (1987), p. 1533, art. 11).

⁶⁰⁵*Ibid.* (1970), p. 30, art. VIII.

marine environment, marine scientific research and navigation—may submit the dispute to a special arbitral tribunal in accordance with annex VIII. In that case, the special arbitral tribunal is composed of five experts, preferably chosen from a list established in each field by the relevant international organization. In the field of fisheries, the list is drawn up by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; in the field of protection and preservation of the marine environment by the United Nations Environment Programme; in the field of marine scientific research by the Inter-Governmental Oceanographic Commission; in the field of navigation, including pollution from vessels and by dumping, by the International Maritime Organization, or in each case by the appropriate subsidiary body concerned to which such organization, programme or commission has delegated this function.⁶⁰⁶ The experts constituting the special arbitral tribunal under this system render a binding decision, in contrast to other panels of experts, which deliver non-binding recommendations.⁶⁰⁷ to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

CHAPTER I

PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;

2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;

3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and

4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.
3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.
4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.
5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.
6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of peace and security.
7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

CHAPTER II

MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco, or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations on 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.
2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

Article 6

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

2. The further responsibilities, functions and powers of the General Assembly with respect to matters mentioned in paragraph 1 (b) above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from the violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

1. The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.

2. The General Assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other organs of the United Nations.

Article 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the international trusteeship system as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

2. Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These questions shall include: recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with paragraph 1 (c) of Article 86, the admission of new Members to the United Nations, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions.

A Member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the Organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

PROCEDURE

The General Assembly shall elect ten other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members after the increase of the membership of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, two of the four additional members shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

²Formerly eleven.

FUNCTIONS AND POWERS

Article 24

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.

2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII and XII.

3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

VOTING

Article 27³

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine⁴ members.
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine⁴ members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

PROCEDURE

Article 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the Organization.
2. The Security Council shall hold periodical meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.
3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

³As amended in 1965.

⁴Formerly seven.

Article 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

Article 31

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected.

Article 32

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations.

CHAPTER VI

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

Article 34

At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.
2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.
2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.
4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.
5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.
3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.
4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. He shall subsequently, at a private meeting of the Court specially convened for the purpose, be afforded an opportunity of making a statement, of furnishing any information or explanations he wishes to give, and of supplying answers, orally or in writing, to any questions put to him. At a further private meeting, at which the Member of the Court concerned shall not be present, the matter shall be discussed; each Member of the Court shall state his opinion, and if requested a vote shall be taken.

1. The Court may, either proprio motu or upon a request made not later than the closure of the written proceedings, decide, for the purpose of a contentious case or request for advisory opinion, to appoint assessors to sit with it without the right to vote.

2. When the Court so decides, the President shall take steps to obtain all the information relevant to the choice of the assessors.

3. The assessors shall be appointed by secret ballot and by a majority of the votes of the judges composing the Court for the case.

4. These same powers shall belong to the Chambers provided for by Articles 26 and 29 of the Statute and to the presidents thereof, and may be exercised in the same manner.

5. Before entering upon their duties, assessors shall make the following declaration at a public sitting:

2. The election shall take place by secret ballot, after the presiding Member of the Court has declared the number of affirmative votes necessary for election; there shall be no nominations. The Member of the Court obtaining the votes of a majority of the Members composing it at the time of the election shall be declared elected, and shall enter forthwith upon his functions.

3. The new President shall conduct the election of the Vice-President either at the same or at the following meeting. The provisions of paragraph 2 of this Article shall apply equally to this election.

The President shall preside at all meetings of the Court; he shall direct the work and supervise the administration of the Court.

Art. 13

1. In the event of a vacancy in the presidency or of the inability of the President to exercise the functions of the presidency, these shall be exercised by the Vice-President, or failing him, by the senior judge.

2. When the President is precluded by a provision of the Statute or of these Rules either from sitting or from presiding in a particular case, he shall continue to exercise the functions of the presidency for all purposes save in respect of that case.

3. The President shall take the measures necessary in order to ensure the continuous exercise of the functions of the presidency at the seat of the Court. In the event of his absence, he may, so far as is compatible with the Statute and these Rules, arrange for these functions to be exercised by the Vice-President, or failing him, by the senior judge.

4. If the President decides to resign the presidency, he shall communicate his decision in writing to the Court through the Vice-President, or failing him, the senior judge. If the Vice-President decides to resign his office, he shall communicate his decision to the President.

If a vacancy in the presidency or the vice-presidency occurs before the date when the current term is due to expire under Article 21, paragraph 1, of the Statute and Article 10, paragraph 1, of these Rules, the Court shall decide whether or not the vacancy shall be filled during the remainder of the term.

SECTION C. THE CHAMBERS

Art. 15

1. The Chamber of Summary Procedure to be formed annually under Article 29 of the Statute shall be composed of five Members of the Court, comprising the President and Vice-President of the Court, acting ex officio, and three other members elected in accordance with Article 18, paragraph 1, of these Rules. In addition, two Members of the Court shall be elected annually to act as substitutes.

2. The election referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article shall be held as soon as possible after the sixth of February in each year. The members of the Chamber shall enter upon their functions on election and continue to serve until the next election; they may be re-elected.

3. If a member of the Chamber is unable, for whatever reason, to sit in a given case, he shall be replaced for the purposes of that case by the senior in precedence of the two substitutes.

4. If a member of the Chamber resigns or otherwise ceases to be a member, his place shall be taken by the senior in precedence of the two substitutes, who shall thereupon become a full member of the Chamber and be replaced by the election of another substitute. Should vacancies exceed the number of available substitutes, elections shall be held as soon as possible in respect of the vacancies still existing after the substitutes have assumed full membership and in respect of the vacancies in the substitutes.

1. When the Court decides to form one or more of the Chambers provided for in Article 26, paragraph 1, of the Statute, it shall determine the particular category of cases for which each Chamber is formed, the number of its members, the period for which they will serve, and the date at which they will enter upon their duties.

2. The members of the Chamber shall be elected in accordance with Article 18, paragraph 1, of these Rules from among the Members of the Court, having regard to any special knowledge, expertise or previous experience which any of the Members of the Court may have in relation to the category of case the Chamber is being formed to deal with.

3. The Court may decide upon the dissolution of a Chamber, but without prejudice to the duty of the Chamber concerned to finish any cases pending before it.

Art. 17

I. A request for the formation of a Chamber to deal with a particular case, as provided for in Article 26, paragraph 2, of the Statute, may be filed at any time until the closure of the written proceedings. Upon receipt of a request made by one party, the President shall ascertain whether the other party assents.

2. When the parties have agreed, the President shall ascertain their views regarding the composition of the Chamber, and shall report to the Court accordingly. He shall also take such steps as may be necessary to give effect to the provisions of Article 31, paragraph 4, of the Statute.

3. When the Court has determined, with the approval of the parties, the number of its Members who are to constitute the Chamber, it shall proceed to their election, in accordance with the provisions of Article 18, paragraph 1, of these Rules. The same procedure shall be followed as regards the filling of any vacancy that may occur on the Chamber.

4. Members of a Chamber formed under this Article who have been replaced, in accordance with Article 13 of the Statute following the expiration of their terms of office, shall continue to sit in all phases of the case, whatever the stage it has then reached.

1. Elections to all Chambers shall take place by secret ballot. The Members of the Court obtaining the largest number of votes constituting a majority of the Members of the Court composing it at the time of the election shall be declared elected. If necessary to fill vacancies, more than one ballot shall take place, such ballot being limited to the number of vacancies that remain to be filled.

2. If a Chamber when formed includes the President or Vice-President of the Court, or both of them, the President or Vice-President, as the case may be, shall preside over that Chamber. In any other event, the Chamber shall elect its own president by secret ballot and by a majority of votes of its members. The Member of the Court who, under this paragraph, presides over the Chamber at the time of its formation shall continue to preside so long as he remains a member of that Chamber.

3. The president of a Chamber shall exercise, in relation to cases being dealt with by that Chamber, all the functions of the President of the Court in relation to cases before the Court.

4. If the president of a Chamber is prevented from sitting or from acting as president, the functions of the presidency shall be assumed by the member of the Chamber who is the senior in precedence and able to act.

SECTION D. INTERNAL FUNCTIONING OF THE COURT

Art. 19

The internal judicial practice of the Court shall, subject to the provisions of the Statute and these Rules, be governed by any resolutions on the subject adopted by the Court.²

Art. 20

1. The quorum specified by Article 25, paragraph 3, of the Statute applies to all meetings of the Court.

2. The obligation of Members of the Court under Article 23, paragraph 3, of the Statute, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court, entails attendance at all such meetings, unless they are prevented from attending by illness or for other serious reasons duly explained to the President, who shall inform the Court.

3. Judges ad hoc are likewise bound to hold themselves at the disposal of the Court and to attend all meetings held in the case in which they are participating. They shall not be taken into account for the calculation of the quorum.

4. The Court shall fix the dates and duration of the judicial vacations and the periods and conditions of leave to be accorded to individual Members of the Court under Article 23, paragraph 2, of the Statute, having regard in both cases to the state of its General List and to the requirements of its current work.

²The resolution now in force was adopted on 12 April 1976.

5. Subject to the same considerations, the Court shall observe the public holidays customary at the place where the Court is sitting.

6. In case of urgency the President may convene the Court at any time.

Art. 21

1. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret. The Court may however at any time decide in respect of its deliberations on other than judicial matters to publish or allow publication of any part of them.

2. Only judges, and the assessors, if any, take part in the Court's judicial deliberations. The Registrar, or his deputy, and other members of the staff of the Registry as may be required shall be present. No other person shall be present except by permission of the Court.

3. The minutes of the Court's judicial deliberations shall record only the title or nature of the subjects or matters discussed, and the results of any vote taken. They shall not record any details of the discussions nor the views expressed, provided however that any judge is entitled to require that a statement made by him be inserted in the minutes.

PART II. THE REGISTRY

Art. 22

1. The Court shall elect its Registrar by secret ballot from amongst candidates proposed by Members of the Court. The Registrar shall be elected for a term of seven years. He may be re-elected.

2. The President shall give notice of a vacancy or impending vacancy to Members of the Court, either forthwith upon the vacancy arising, or, where the vacancy will arise on the expiration of the term of office of the Registrar, not less than three months prior thereto. The President shall fix a date for the closure of the list of candidates so as to enable nominations and information concerning the candidates to be received in sufficient time.

3. Nominations shall indicate the relevant information concerning the candidate, and in particular information as to his age, nationality, and present occupation, university qualifications, knowledge of languages, and any previous experience in law, diplomacy or the work of international organizations.

4. The candidate obtaining the votes of the majority of the Members of the Court composing it at the time of the election shall be declared elected.

Art. 23

The Court shall elect a Deputy-Registrar: the provisions of Article 22 of these Rules shall apply to his election and term of office.

Art. 24

1. Before taking up his duties, the Registrar shall make the following declaration at a meeting of the Court:

"I solemnly declare that I will perform the duties incumbent upon me as Registrar of the International Court of Justice in all loyalty, discretion and good conscience, and that I will faithfully observe all the provisions of the Statute and of the Rules of the Court."

2. The Deputy-Registrar shall make a similar declaration at a meeting of the Court before taking up his duties.

1. The staff-members of the Registry shall be appointed by the Court on proposals submitted by the Registrar. Appointments to such posts as the Court shall determine may however be made by the Registrar with the approval of the President.

2. Before taking up his duties, every staff-member shall make the following declaration before the President, the Registrar being present:

"I solemnly declare that I will perform the duties incumbent upon me as an official of the International Court of Justice in all loyalty, discretion and good conscience, and that I will faithfully observe all the provisions of the Statute and of the Rules of the Court."

Art. 26

1. The Registrar, in the discharge of his functions, shall:

(a) be the regular channel of communications to and from the Court, and in particular shall effect all communications, notifications and transmission of documents required by the Statute or by these Rules and ensure that the date of despatch and receipt thereof may be readily verified;

(b) keep, under the supervision of the President, and in such form as may be laid down by the Court, a General List of all cases, entered and numbered in the order in which the documents instituting proceedings or requesting an advisory opinion are received in the Registry;

(c) have the custody of the declarations accepting the jurisdiction of the Court made by States not parties to the Statute in accordance with any resolution adopted by the Security Council under Article 35, paragraph 2, of the Statute, and transmit certified copies thereof to all States parties to the Statute, to such other States as shall have deposited declarations, and to the Secretary-General of the United Nations;

(d) transmit to the parties copies of all pleadings and documents annexed upon receipt thereof in the Registry;

(e) communicate to the government of the country in which the Court or a Chamber is sitting, and any other governments which may be concerned, the necessary information as to the persons from time to time entitled, under the Statute and relevant agreements, to privileges, immunities, or facilities;

(f) be present, in person or by his deputy, at meetings of the Court, and of the Chambers, and be responsible for the preparation of minutes of such meetings;

(m) ensure that information concerning the Court and its activities is made accessible to governments, the highest national courts of justice, professional and learned societies, legal faculties and schools of law, and public information media;

(n) have custody of the seals and stamps of the Court, of the archives of the Court, and of such other archives as may be entrusted to the Court.³

³The Registrar also keeps the Archives of the Permanent Court of International Justice entrusted to the present Court by decision of the Permanent Court of October 1945 (I.C.J. Yearbook 1946-1947, p. 26), and the Archives of the Trial of the Major War Criminals before the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg (1945-1946), entrusted to the Court by decision of that Tribunal of 1 October 1946; the Court authorized the Registrar to accept the latter Archives by decision of 19 November 1949.

2. The Court may at any time entrust additional functions to the Registrar.
3. In the discharge of his functions the Registrar shall be responsible to the Court.

Art. 27

1. The Deputy-Registrar shall assist the Registrar, act as Registrar in the latter's absence and, in the event of the office becoming vacant, exercise the functions of Registrar until the office has been filled.

2. If both the Registrar and the Deputy-Registrar are unable to carry out the duties of Registrar, the President shall appoint an official of the Registry to discharge those duties for such time as may be necessary. If both offices are vacant at the same time, the President, after consulting the Members of the Court, shall appoint an official of the Registry to discharge the duties of Registrar pending an election to that office.

Art. 28

1. The Registry shall comprise the Registrar, the Deputy-Registrar, and such other staff as the Registrar shall require for the efficient discharge of his functions.

2. The Court shall prescribe the organization of the Registry, and shall for this purpose request the Registrar to make proposals.

3. Instructions for the Registry shall be drawn up by the Registrar and approved by the Court.

4. The staff of the Registry shall be subject to Staff Regulations drawn up by the Registrar, so far as possible in conformity with the United Nations Staff Regulations and Staff Rules, and approved by the Court.

Art. 29

1. The Registrar may be removed from office only if, in the opinion of two-thirds of the Members of the Court, he has either become permanently incapacitated from exercising his functions, or has committed a serious breach of his duties.

2. Before a decision is taken under this Article, the Registrar shall be informed by the President of the action contemplated, in a written statement which shall include the grounds therefor and any relevant evidence. He shall subsequently, at a private meeting of the Court, be afforded an opportunity of making a statement, of furnishing any information or explanations he wishes to give, and of supplying answers, orally or in writing, to any questions put to him.

3. The Deputy-Registrar may be removed from office only on the same grounds and by the same procedure.

PART III. PROCEEDINGS IN CONTENTIOUS CASES

SECTION A. COMMUNICATIONS TO THE COURT AND CONSULTATIONS

Art. 30

All communications to the Court under these Rules shall be addressed to the Registrar unless otherwise stated. Any request made by a party shall likewise be addressed to the Registrar unless made in open court in the course of the oral proceedings.

Art. 31

In every case submitted to the Court, the President shall ascertain the views of the parties with regard to questions of procedure. For this purpose he shall summon the agents of the parties to meet him as soon as possible after their appointment, and whenever necessary thereafter.

SECTION B. THE COMPOSITION OF THE COURT FOR PARTICULAR CASES

Art. 32

1. If the President of the Court is a national of one of the parties in a case he shall not exercise the functions of the presidency in respect of that case. The same rule applies to the Vice-President, or to the senior judge, when called on to act as President.

2. The Member of the Court who is presiding in a case on the date on which the Court convenes for the oral proceedings shall continue to preside in that case until completion of the current phase of the case, notwithstanding the election in the meantime of a new President or Vice-President. If he should become unable to act, the presidency for the case shall be determined in accordance with Article 13 of these Rules, and on the basis of the composition of the Court on the date on which it convened for the oral proceedings.

Except as provided in Article 17 of these Rules, Members of the Court who have been replaced, in accordance with Article 13, paragraph 3, of the Statute following the expiration of their terms of office, shall discharge the duty imposed upon them by that paragraph by continuing to sit until the completion of any phase of a case in respect of which the Court convenes for the oral proceedings prior to the date of such replacement.

Art. 34

1. In case of any doubt arising as to the application of Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Statute or in case of a disagreement as to the application of Article 24 of the Statute, the President shall inform the Members of the Court, with whom the decision lies.

2. If a party desires to bring to the attention of the Court facts which it considers to be of possible relevance to the application of the provisions of the Statute mentioned in the previous paragraph, but which it believes may not be known to the Court, that party shall communicate confidentially such facts to the President in writing.

1. If a party proposes to exercise the power conferred by Article 31 of the Statute to choose a judge ad hoc in a case, it shall notify the Court of its intention as soon as possible. If the name and nationality of the judge selected are not indicated at the same time, the party shall, not later than two months before the time-limit fixed for the filing of the Counter-Memorial, inform the Court of the name and nationality of the person chosen and supply brief biographical details. The judge ad hoc may be of a nationality other than that of the party which chooses him.

2. If a party proposes to abstain from choosing a judge ad hoc, on condition of a like abstention by the other party, it shall so notify the Court which shall inform the other party. If the other party thereafter gives notice of its intention to choose, or chooses, a judge ad hoc, the time-limit for the party which has previously abstained from choosing a judge may be extended by the President.

3. A copy of any notification relating to the choice of a judge ad hoc shall be communicated by the Registrar to the other party, which shall be requested to furnish, within a time-limit to be fixed by the President, such observations as it may wish to make. If within the said time-limit no objection is raised by the other party, and if none appears to the Court itself, the parties shall be so informed.

4. In the event of any objection or doubt, the matter shall be decided by the Court, if necessary after hearing the parties.

5. A judge ad hoc who has accepted appointment but who becomes unable to sit may be replaced.

6. If and when the reasons for the participation of a judge ad hoc are found no longer to exist, he shall cease to sit on the Bench.

Art. 36

1. If the Court finds that two or more parties are in the same interest, and therefore are to be reckoned as one party only, and that there is no Member of the Court of the nationality of any one of those parties upon the Bench, the Court shall fix a time-limit within which they may jointly choose a judge ad hoc.

2. Should any party amongst those found by the Court to be in the same interest allege the existence of a separate interest of its own, or put forward any other objection, the matter shall be decided by the Court, if necessary after hearing the parties.

Art. 37

1. If a Member of the Court having the nationality of one of the parties is or becomes unable to sit in any phase of a case, that party shall thereupon become entitled to choose a judge ad hoc within a time-limit to be fixed by the Court, or by the President if the Court is not sitting.

2. Parties in the same interest shall be deemed not to have a judge of one of their nationalities upon the Bench if the Member of the Court having one of their nationalities is or becomes unable to sit in any phase of the case.

3. If the Member of the Court having the nationality of a party becomes able to sit not later than the closure of the written proceedings in that phase of the case, that Member of the Court shall resume his seat on the Bench in the case.

SECTION C. PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE COURT

SUBSECTION I. INSTITUTION OF PROCEEDINGS

Art. 38

1. When proceedings before the Court are instituted by means of an application addressed as specified in Article 40, paragraph 1, of the Statute, the application shall indicate the party making it, the State against which the claim is brought, and the subject of the dispute.

2. The application shall specify as far as possible the legal grounds upon which the jurisdiction of the Court is said to be based; it shall also specify the precise nature of the claim, together with a succinct statement of the facts and grounds on which the claim is based.

3. The original of the application shall be signed either by the agent of the party submitting it, or by the diplomatic representative of that party in the country in which the Court has its seat, or by some other duly authorized person. If the application bears the signature of someone other than such diplomatic representative, the signature must be authenticated by the latter or by the competent authority of the applicant's foreign ministry.

4. The Registrar shall forthwith transmit to the respondent a certified copy of the application.

5. When the applicant State proposes to found the jurisdiction of the Court upon a consent thereto yet to be given or manifested by the State against which such application is made, the application shall be transmitted to that State. It shall not however be entered in the General List, nor any action be taken in the proceedings, unless and until the State against which such application is made consents to the Court's jurisdiction for the purposes of the case.

Art. 39

1. When proceedings are brought before the Court by the notification of a special agreement, in conformity with Article 40, paragraph 1, of the Statute, the notification may be effected by the parties jointly or by any one or more of them. If the notification is not a joint one, a certified copy of it shall forthwith be communicated by the Registrar to the other party.

2. In each case the notification shall be accompanied by an original or certified copy of the special agreement. The notification shall also, in so far as this is not already apparent from the agreement, indicate the precise subject of the dispute and identify the parties to it.

Art. 40

1. Except in the circumstances contemplated by Article 38, paragraph 5, of these Rules, all steps on behalf of the parties after proceedings have been instituted shall be taken by agents. Agents shall have an address for service at the seat of the Court to which all communications concerning the case are to be sent. Communications addressed to the agents of the parties shall be considered as having been addressed to the parties themselves.

2. When proceedings are instituted by means of an application, the name of the agent for the applicant shall be stated. The respondent, upon receipt of the certified copy of the application, or as soon as possible thereafter, shall inform the Court of the name of its agent.

3. When proceedings are brought by notification of a special agreement, the party making the notification shall state the name of its agent. Any other party to the special agreement, upon receiving from the Registrar a certified copy of such notification, or as soon as possible thereafter, shall inform the Court of the name of its agent if it has not already done so.

The institution of proceedings by a State which is not a party to the Statute but which, under Article 35, paragraph 2, thereof, has accepted the jurisdiction of the Court by a declaration made in accordance with any resolution adopted by the Security Council under that Article,⁴ shall be accompanied by a deposit of the declaration in question, unless the latter has previously been deposited with the Registrar. If any question of the validity or effect of such declaration arises, the Court shall decide.

Art. 42

The Registrar shall transmit copies of any application or notification of a special agreement instituting proceedings before the Court to: (a) the Secretary-General of the United Nations; (b) the Members of the United Nations; (c) other States entitled to appear before the Court.

Art. 43

Whenever the construction of a convention to which States other than those concerned in the case are parties may be in question within the meaning of Article 63, paragraph 1, of the Statute, the Court shall consider what directions shall be given to the Registrar in the matter.

SUBSECTION 2. THE WRITTEN PROCEEDINGS

Art. 44

1. In the light of the information obtained by the President under Article 31 of these Rules, the Court shall make the necessary orders to determine, inter alia, the number and the order of filing of the pleadings and the time-limits within which they must be filed.

2. In making an order under paragraph 1 of this Article, any agreement between the parties which does not cause unjustified delay shall be taken into account.

3. The Court may, at request of the party concerned, extend any time-limit, or decide that any step taken after the expiration of the time-limit fixed therefor shall be considered as valid, if it is satisfied that there is adequate justification for the request. In either case the other party shall be given an opportunity to state its views.

4. If the Court is not sitting, its powers under this Article shall be exercised by the President, but without prejudice to any subsequent decision of the Court. If the consultation referred to in Article 31 reveals persistent disagreement between the parties as to the application of Article 45, paragraph 2, or Article 46, paragraph 2, of these Rules, the Court shall be convened to decide the matter.

⁴The resolution now in force was adopted on 15 October 1946.

Art. 45

1. The pleadings in a case begun by means of an application shall consist, in the following order, of: a Memorial by the applicant; a Counter-Memorial by the respondent.

2. The Court may authorize or direct that there shall be a Reply by the applicant and a Rejoinder by the respondent if the parties are so agreed, or if the Court decides, proprio motu or at the request of one of the parties, that these pleadings are necessary.

Art. 46

1. In a case begun by the notification of a special agreement, the number and order of the pleadings shall be governed by the provisions of the agreement, unless the Court, after ascertaining the views of the parties, decides otherwise.

2. If the special agreement contains no such provision, and if the parties have not subsequently agreed on the number and order of pleadings, they shall each file a Memorial and Counter-Memorial, within the same time-limits. The Court shall not authorize the presentation of Replies unless it finds them to be necessary.

The Court may at any time direct that the proceedings in two or more cases be joined. It may also direct that the written or oral proceedings, including the calling of witnesses, be in common; or the Court may, without effecting any formal joinder, direct common action in any of these respects.

Art. 48

Time-limits for the completion of steps in the proceedings may be fixed by assigning a specified period but shall always indicate definite dates. Such time-limits shall be as short as the character of the case permits.

Art. 49

1. A Memorial shall contain a statement of the relevant facts, a statement of law, and the submissions.

2. A Counter-Memorial shall contain: an admission or denial of the facts stated in the Memorial; any additional facts, if necessary; observations concerning the statement of law in the Memorial; a statement of law in answer thereto; and the submissions.

3. The Reply and Rejoinder, whenever authorized by the Court, shall not merely repeat the parties' contentions, but shall be directed to bringing out the issues that still divide them.

4. Every pleading shall set out the party's submissions at the relevant stage of the case, distinctly from the arguments presented, or shall confirm the submissions previously made.

Art. 50

1. There shall be annexed to the original of every pleading certified copies of any relevant documents adduced in support of the contentions contained in the pleading.

2. If only parts of a document are relevant, only such extracts as are necessary for the purpose of the pleading in question need be annexed. A copy of the whole document shall be deposited in the Registry, unless it has been published and is readily available.

3. A list of all documents annexed to a pleading shall be furnished at the time the pleading is filed.

Art. 51

1. If the parties are agreed that the written proceedings shall be conducted wholly in one of the two official languages of the Court, the pleadings shall be submitted only in that language. If the parties are not so agreed, any pleading or any part of a pleading shall be submitted in one or other of the official languages.

2. If in pursuance of Article 39, paragraph 3, of the Statute a language other than French or English is used, a translation into French or English certified as accurate by the party submitting it, shall be attached to the original of each pleading.

3. When a document annexed to a pleading is not in one of the official languages of the Court, it shall be accompanied by a translation into one of these languages certified by the party submitting it as accurate. The translation may be confined to part of an annex, or to extracts therefrom, but in this case it must be accompanied by an explanatory note indicating what passages are translated. The Court may however require a more extensive or a complete translation to be furnished.

Art. 52⁵

1. The original of every pleading shall be signed by the agent and filed in the Registry. It shall be accompanied by a certified copy of the pleading, documents annexed, and any translations, for communication to the other party in accordance with Article 43, paragraph 4, of the Statute, and by the number of additional copies required by the Registry, but without prejudice to an increase in that number should the need arise later.

2. All pleadings shall be dated. When a pleading has to be filed by a certain date, it is the date of the receipt of the pleading in the Registry which will be regarded by the Court as the material date.

3. If the Registrar arranges for the printing of a pleading at the request of a party, the text must be supplied in sufficient time to enable the printed pleading to be filed in the Registry before the expiration of any time-limit which may apply to it. The printing is done under the responsibility of the party in question.

4. The correction of a slip or error in any document which has been filed may be made at any time with the consent of the other party or by leave of the President. Any correction so effected shall be notified to the other party in the same manner as the pleading to which it relates.

Art. 53

1. The Court, or the President if the Court is not sitting, may at any time decide, after ascertaining the views of the parties, that copies of the pleadings and documents annexed shall be made available to a State entitled to appear before it which has asked to be furnished with such copies.

2. The Court may, after ascertaining the views of the parties, decide that copies of the pleadings and documents annexed shall be made accessible to the public on or after the opening of the oral proceedings.

SUBSECTION 3. THE ORAL PROCEEDINGS

Art. 54

1. Upon the closure of the written proceedings, the case is ready for hearing. The date for the opening of the oral proceedings shall be fixed by the Court, which may also decide, if occasion should arise, that the opening or the continuance of the oral proceedings be postponed.

2. When fixing the date for, or postponing, the opening of the oral proceedings the Court shall have regard to the priority required by Article 74 of these Rules and to any other special circumstances, including the urgency of a particular case.

3. When the Court is not sitting, its powers under this Article shall be exercised by the President.

⁵The agents of the parties are requested to ascertain from the Registry the usual format of the pleadings, and the conditions on which the Court may bear part of the cost of printing.

Art. 55

The Court may, if it considers it desirable, decide pursuant to Article 22, paragraph 1, of the Statute that all or part of the further proceedings in a case shall be held at a place other than the seat of the Court. Before so deciding, it shall ascertain the views of the parties.

Art. 56

1. After the closure of the written proceedings, no further documents may be submitted to the Court by either party except with the consent of the other party or as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article. The party desiring to produce a new document shall file the original or a certified copy thereof, together with the number of copies required by the Registry, which shall be responsible for communicating it to the other party and shall inform the Court. The other party shall be held to have given its consent if it does not lodge an objection to the production of the document.

2. In the absence of consent, the Court, after hearing the parties, may, if it considers the document necessary, authorize its production.

3. If a new document is produced under paragraph 1 or paragraph 2 of this Article, the other party shall have an opportunity of commenting upon it and of submitting documents in support of its comments.

4. No reference may be made during the oral proceedings to the contents of any document which has not been produced in accordance with Article 43 of the Statute or this Article, unless the document is part of a publication readily available.

5. The application of the provisions of this Article shall not in itself constitute a ground for delaying the opening or the course of the oral proceedings.

Art. 57

Without prejudice to the provisions of the Rules concerning the production of documents, each party shall communicate to the Registrar, in sufficient time before the opening of the oral proceedings, information regarding any evidence which it intends to produce or which it intends to request the Court to obtain. This communication shall contain a list of the surnames, first names, nationalities, descriptions and places of residence of the witnesses and experts whom the party intends to call, with indications in general terms of the point or points to which their evidence will be directed. A copy of the communication shall also be furnished for transmission to the other party.

1. The Court shall determine whether the parties should present their arguments before or after the production of the evidence; the parties shall, however, retain the right to comment on the evidence given.

2. The order in which the parties will be heard, the method of handling the evidence and of examining any witnesses and experts, and the number of counsel and advocates to be heard on behalf of each party, shall be settled by the Court after the views of the parties have been ascertained in accordance with Article 31 of these Rules.

Art. 59

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted. Such a decision or demand may concern either the whole or part of the hearing, and may be made at any time.

Art. 60

1. The oral statements made on behalf of each party shall be as succinct as possible within the limits of what is requisite for the adequate presentation of that party's contentions at the hearing. Accordingly, they shall be directed to the issues that still divide the parties, and shall not go over the whole ground covered by the pleadings, or merely repeat the facts and arguments these contain.

2. At the conclusion of the last statement made by a party at the hearing, its agent, without recapitulation of the arguments, shall read that party's final submissions. A copy of the written text of these, signed by the agent, shall be communicated to the Court and transmitted to the other party.

Art. 61

1. The Court may at any time prior to or during the hearing indicate any points or issues to which it would like the parties specially to address themselves, or on which it considers that there has been sufficient argument.

2. The Court may, during the hearing, put questions to the agents, counsel and advocates, and may ask them for explanations.

3. Each judge has a similar right to put questions, but before exercising it he should make his intention known to the President, who is made responsible by Article 45 of the Statute for the control of the hearing.

4. The agents, counsel and advocates may answer either immediately or within a time-limit fixed by the President.

Art. 62

1. The Court may at any time call upon the parties to produce such evidence or to give such explanations as the Court may consider to be necessary for the elucidation of any aspect of the matters in issue, or may itself seek other information for this purpose.

2. The Court may, if necessary, arrange for the attendance of a witness or expert to give evidence in the proceedings.

Art. 63

1. The parties may call any witnesses or experts appearing on the list communicated to the Court pursuant to Article 57 of these Rules. If at any time during the hearing a party wishes to call a witness or expert whose name was not included in that list, it shall so inform the Court and the other party, and shall supply the information required by Article 57. The witness or expert may be called either if the other party makes no objection or if the Court is satisfied that his evidence seems likely to prove relevant.

2. The Court, or the President if the Court is not sitting, shall, at the request of one of the parties or proprio motu, take the necessary steps for the examination of witnesses otherwise than before the Court itself.

Unless on account of special circumstances the Court decides on a different form of words,

(a) every witness shall make the following declaration before giving any evidence:

"I solemnly declare upon my honour and conscience that I will speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

(b) every expert shall make the following declaration before making any statement:

"I solemnly declare upon my honour and conscience that I will speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and that my statement will be in accordance with my sincere belief."

Art. 65

Witnesses and experts shall be examined by the agents, counsel or advocates of the parties under the control of the President. Questions may be put to them by the President and by the judges. Before testifying, witnesses shall remain out of court.

Art. 66

The Court may at any time decide, either proprio motu or at the request of a party, to exercise its functions with regard to the obtaining of evidence at a place or locality to which the case relates, subject to such conditions as the Court may decide upon after ascertaining the views of the parties. The necessary arrangements shall be made in accordance with Article 44 of the Statute.

Art. 67

1. If the Court considers it necessary to arrange for an enquiry or an expert opinion, it shall, after hearing the parties, issue an order to this effect, defining the subject of the enquiry or expert opinion, stating the number and mode of appointment of the persons to hold the enquiry or of the experts, and laying down the procedure to be followed. Where appropriate, the Court shall require persons appointed to carry out an enquiry, or to give an expert opinion, to make a solemn declaration.

2. Every report or record of an enquiry and every expert opinion shall be communicated to the parties, which shall be given the opportunity of commenting upon it.

Witnesses and experts who appear at the instance of the Court under Article 62, paragraph 2, and persons appointed under Article 67, paragraph 1, of these Rules, to carry out an enquiry or to give an expert opinion, shall, where appropriate, be paid out of the funds of the Court.

Art. 69

1. The Court may, at any time prior to the closure of the oral proceedings, either proprio motu or at the request of one of the parties communicated as provided in Article 57 of these Rules, request a public international organization, pursuant to Article 34 of the Statute, to furnish information relevant to a case before it. The Court, after consulting the chief administrative officer of the organization concerned, shall decide whether such information shall be presented to it orally or in writing, and the time-limits for its presentation.

2. When a public international organization sees fit to furnish, on its own initiative, information relevant to a case before the Court, it shall do so in the form of a Memorial to be filed in the Registry before the closure of the written proceedings. The Court shall retain the right to require such information to be supplemented, either orally or in writing, in the form of answers to any questions which it may see fit to formulate, and also to authorize the parties to comment, either orally or in writing, on the information thus furnished.

3. In the circumstances contemplated by Article 34, paragraph 3, of the Statute, the Registrar, on the instructions of the Court, or of the President if the Court is not sitting, shall proceed as prescribed in that paragraph. The Court, or the President if the Court is not sitting, may, as from the date on which the Registrar has communicated copies of the written proceedings and after consulting the chief administrative officer of the public international organization concerned, fix a time-limit within which the organization may submit to the Court its observations in writing. These observations shall be communicated to the parties and may be discussed by them and by the representative of the said organization during the oral proceedings.

4. In the foregoing paragraphs, the term "public international organization" denotes an international organization of States.

1. In the absence of any decision to the contrary by the Court, all speeches and statements made and evidence given at the hearing in one of the official languages of the Court shall be interpreted into the other official language. If they are made or given in any other language, they shall be interpreted into the two official languages of the Court.

2. Whenever, in accordance with Article 39, paragraph 3, of the Statute, a language other than French or English is used, the necessary arrangements for interpretation into one of the two official languages shall be made by the party concerned; however, the Registrar shall make arrangements for the verification of the interpretation provided by a party of evidence given on the party's behalf. In the case of witnesses or experts who appear at the instance of the Court, arrangements for interpretation shall be made by the Registry.

3. A party on behalf of which speeches or statements are to be made, or evidence given, in a language which is not one of the official languages of the Court, shall so notify the Registrar in sufficient time for him to make the necessary arrangements.

4. Before first interpreting in the case, interpreters provided by a party shall make the following declaration in open court:

"I solemnly declare upon my honour and conscience that my interpretation will be faithful and complete."

Art. 71

1. A verbatim record shall be made by the Registrar of every hearing, in the official language of the Court which has been used. When the language used is not one of the two official languages of the Court, the verbatim record shall be prepared in one of the Court's official languages.

2. When speeches or statements are made in a language which is not one of the official languages of the Court, the party on behalf of which they are made shall supply to the Registry in advance a text thereof in one of the official languages, and this text shall constitute the relevant part of the verbatim record.

3. The transcript of the verbatim record shall be preceded by the names of the judges present, and those of the agents, counsel and advocates of the parties.

4. Copies of the transcript shall be circulated to the judges sitting in the case, and to the parties. The latter may, under the supervision of the Court, correct the transcripts of speeches and statements made on their behalf, but in no case may such corrections affect the sense and bearing thereof. The judges may likewise make corrections in the transcript of anything they may have said.

5. Witnesses and experts shall be shown that part of the transcript which relates to the evidence given, or the statements made by them, and may correct it in like manner as the parties.

6. One certified true copy of the eventual corrected transcript, signed by the President and the Registrar, shall constitute the authentic minutes of the sitting for the purposes of Article 47 of the Statute. The minutes of public hearings shall be printed and published by the Court.

Art. 72

Any written reply by a party to a question put under Article 61, or any evidence or explanation supplied by a party under Article 62 of these Rules, received by the Court after the closure of the oral proceedings, shall be communicated to the other party, which shall be given the opportunity of commenting upon it. If necessary the oral proceedings may be reopened for that purpose.

SECTION D. INCIDENTAL PROCEEDINGS

SUBSECTION I. INTERIM PROTECTION

Art. 73

1. A written request for the indication of provisional measures may be made by a party at any time during the course of the proceedings in the case in connection with which the request is made.

2. The request shall specify the reasons therefor, the possible consequences if it is not granted, and the measures requested. A certified copy shall forthwith be transmitted by the Registrar to the other party.

Art. 74

1. A request for the indication of provisional measures shall have priority over all other cases.

2. The Court, if it is not sitting when the request is made, shall be convened forthwith for the purpose of proceeding to a decision on the request as a matter of urgency.

3. The Court, or the President if the Court is not sitting, shall fix a date for a hearing which will afford the parties an opportunity of being represented at it. The Court shall receive and take into account any observations that may be presented to it before the closure of the oral proceedings.

4. Pending the meeting of the Court, the President may call upon the parties to act in such a way as will enable any order the Court may make on the request for provisional measures to have its appropriate effects.

Art. 75

1. The Court may at any time decide to examine proprio motu whether the circumstances of the case require the indication of provisional measures which ought to be taken or complied with by any or all of the parties.

2. When a request for provisional measures has been made, the Court may indicate measures that are in whole or in part other than those requested, or that ought to be taken or complied with by the party which has itself made the request.

3. The rejection of a request for the indication of provisional measures shall not prevent the party which made it from making a fresh request in the same case based on new facts.

Art. 76

1. At the request of a party the Court may, at any time before the final judgment in the case, revoke or modify any decision concerning provisional measures if, in its opinion, some change in the situation justifies such revocation or modification.

2. Any application by a party proposing such a revocation or modification shall specify the change in the situation considered to be relevant.

3. Before taking any decision under paragraph 1 of this Article the Court shall afford the parties an opportunity of presenting their observations on the subject.

Art. 77

Any measures indicated by the Court under Articles 73 and 74 of these Rules, and any decision taken by the Court under Article 76, paragraph 1, of these Rules, shall forthwith be communicated to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for transmission to the Security Council in pursuance of Article 41, paragraph 2, of the Statute.

Art. 78

The Court may request information from the parties on any matter connected with the implementation of any provisional measures it has indicated.

SUBSECTION 2. PRELIMINARY OBJECTIONS

Art. 79

1. Any objection by the respondent to the jurisdiction of the Court or to the admissibility of the application, or other objection the decision upon which is requested before any further proceedings on the merits, shall be made in writing within the time-limit fixed for the delivery of the Counter-Memorial. Any such objection made by a party other than the respondent shall be filed within the time-limit fixed for the delivery of that party's first pleading.

2. The preliminary objection shall set out the facts and the law on which the objection is based, the submissions and a list of the documents in support; it shall mention any evidence which the party may desire to produce. Copies of the supporting documents shall be attached.

3. Upon receipt by the Registry of a preliminary objection, the proceedings on the merits shall be suspended and the Court, or the President if the Court is not sitting, shall fix the time-limit within which the other party may present a written statement of its observations and submissions; documents in support shall be attached and evidence which it is proposed to produce shall be mentioned.

4. Unless otherwise decided by the Court, the further proceedings shall be oral.

5. The statements of fact and law in the pleadings referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Article, and the statements and evidence presented at the hearings contemplated by paragraph 4, shall be confined to those matters that are relevant to the objection.

6. In order to enable the Court to determine its jurisdiction at the preliminary stage of the proceedings, the Court, whenever necessary, may request the parties to argue all questions of law and fact, and to adduce all evidence, which bear on the issue.

7. After hearing the parties, the Court shall give its decision in the form of a judgment, by which it shall either uphold the objection, reject it, or declare that the objection does not possess, in the circumstances of the case, an exclusively preliminary character. If the Court rejects the objection or declares that it does not possess an exclusively preliminary character, it shall fix time-limits for the further proceedings.

8. Any agreement between the parties that an objection submitted under paragraph 1 of this Article be heard and determined within the framework of the merits shall be given effect by the Court.

SUBSECTION 3. COUNTER-CLAIMS

Art. 80

1. A counter-claim may be presented provided that it is directly connected with the subject-matter of the claim of the other party and that it comes within the jurisdiction of the Court.

2. A counter-claim shall be made in the Counter-Memorial of the party presenting it, and shall appear as part of the submissions of that party.

3. In the event of doubt as to the connection between the question presented by way of counter-claim and the subject-matter of the claim of the other party the Court shall, after hearing the parties, decide whether or not the question thus presented shall be joined to the original proceedings.

SUBSECTION 4. INTERVENTION

Art. 81

1. An application for permission to intervene under the terms of Article 62 of the Statute, signed in the manner provided for in Article 38, paragraph 3, of these Rules, shall be filed as soon as possible, and not later than the closure of the written proceedings. In exceptional circumstances, an application submitted at a later stage may however be admitted.

2. The application shall state the name of an agent. It shall specify the case to which it relates, and shall set out:

(a) the interest of a legal nature which the State applying to intervene considers may be affected by the decision in that case;

(b) the precise object of the intervention;

(c) any basis of jurisdiction which is claimed to exist as between the State applying to intervene and the parties to the case.

3. The application shall contain a list of the documents in support, which documents shall be attached.

Art. 82

1. A State which desires to avail itself of the right of intervention conferred upon it by Article 63 of the Statute shall file a declaration to that effect, signed in the manner provided for in Article 38, paragraph 3, of these Rules. Such a declaration shall be filed as soon as possible, and not later than the date fixed for the opening of the oral proceedings. In exceptional circumstances a declaration submitted at a later stage may however be admitted.

2. The declaration shall state the name of an agent. It shall specify the case and the convention to which it relates and shall contain:

- (a) particulars of the basis on which the declarant State considers itself a party to the convention;
 - (b) identification of the particular provisions of the convention the construction of which it considers to be in question;
 - (c) statement of the construction of those provisions for which it contends;
 - (d) a list of the documents in support, which documents shall be attached.
3. Such a declaration may be filed by a State that considers itself a party to the convention the construction of which is in question but has not received the notification referred to in Article 63 of the Statute.

Art. 83

1. Certified copies of the application for permission to intervene under Article 62 of the Statute, or of the declaration of intervention under Article 63 of the Statute, shall be communicated forthwith to the parties to the case, which shall be invited to furnish their written observations within a time-limit to be fixed by the Court or by the President if the Court is not sitting.
2. The Registrar shall also transmit copies to: (a) the Secretary-General of the United Nations; (b) the Members of the United Nations; (c) other States entitled to appear before the Court; (d) any other States which have been notified under Article 63 of the Statute.

1. The Court shall decide whether an application for permission to intervene under Article 62 of the Statute should be granted, and whether an intervention under Article 63 of the Statute is admissible, as a matter of priority unless in view of the circumstances of the case the Court shall otherwise determine.
2. If, within the time-limit fixed under Article 83 of these Rules, an objection is filed to an application for permission to intervene, or to the admissibility of a declaration of intervention, the Court shall hear the State seeking to intervene and the parties before deciding.

Art. 85

1. If an application for permission to intervene under Article 62 of the Statute is granted, the intervening State shall be supplied with copies of the pleadings and documents annexed and shall be entitled to submit a written statement within a time-limit to be fixed by the Court. A further time-limit shall be fixed within which the parties may, if they so desire, furnish their written observations on that statement prior to the oral proceedings. If the Court is not sitting, these time-limits shall be fixed by the President.
2. The time-limits fixed according to the preceding paragraph shall, so far as possible, coincide with those already fixed for the pleadings in the case.
3. The intervening State shall be entitled, in the course of the oral proceedings, to submit its observations with respect to the subject-matter of the intervention.

Art. 86

1. If an intervention under Article 63 of the Statute is admitted, the intervening State shall be furnished with copies of the pleadings and documents annexed, and shall be entitled, within a time-limit to be fixed by the Court, or by the President if the Court is not sitting, to submit its written observations on the subject-matter of the intervention.
2. These observations shall be communicated to the parties and to any other State admitted to intervene. The intervening State shall be entitled, in the course of the oral proceedings, to submit its observations with respect to the subject-matter of the intervention.

SUBSECTION 5. SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE COURT

Art. 87

1. When in accordance with a treaty or convention in force a contentious case is brought before the Court concerning a matter which has been the subject of proceedings before some other international body, the provisions of the Statute and of the Rules governing contentious cases shall apply.

2. The application instituting proceedings shall identify the decision or other act of the international body concerned and a copy thereof shall be annexed; it shall contain a precise statement of the questions raised in regard to that decision or act, which constitute the subject of the dispute referred to the Court.

SUBSECTION 6. DISCONTINUANCE

Art. 88

1. If at any time before the final judgment on the merits has been delivered the parties, either jointly or separately, notify the Court in writing that they have agreed to discontinue the proceedings, the Court shall make an order recording the discontinuance and directing that the case be removed from the list.

2. If the parties have agreed to discontinue the proceedings in consequence of having reached a settlement of the dispute and if they so desire, the Court may record this fact in the order for the removal of the case from the list, or indicate in, or annex to, the order, the terms of the settlement.

3. If the Court is not sitting, any order under this Article may be made by the President.

1. If in the course of proceedings instituted by means of an application, the applicant informs the Court in writing that it is not going on with the proceedings, and if, at the date on which this communication is received by the Registry, the respondent has not yet taken any step in the proceedings, the Court shall make an order officially recording the discontinuance of the proceedings and directing the removal of the case from the list. A copy of this order shall be sent by the Registrar to the respondent.

2. If, at the time when the notice of discontinuance is received, the respondent has already taken some step in the proceedings, the Court shall fix a time-limit within which the respondent may state whether it opposes the discontinuance of the proceedings. If no objection is made to the discontinuance before the expiration of the time-limit, acquiescence will be presumed and the Court shall make an order officially recording the discontinuance of the proceedings and directing the removal of the case from the list. If objection is made, the proceedings shall continue.

3. If the Court is not sitting, its powers under this Article may be exercised by the President.

SECTION E. PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE CHAMBERS

Art. 90

Proceedings before the Chambers mentioned in Articles 26 and 29 of the Statute shall, subject to the provisions of the Statute and of these Rules relating specifically to the Chambers, be governed by the provisions of Parts I to III of these Rules applicable in contentious cases before the Court.

Art. 91

1. When it is desired that a case should be dealt with by one of the Chambers which has been formed in pursuance of Article 26, paragraph 1, or Article 29 of the Statute, a request to this effect shall either be made in the document instituting the proceedings or accompany it. Effect will be given to the request if the parties are in agreement.

2. Upon receipt by the Registry of this request, the President of the Court shall communicate it to the members of the Chamber concerned. He shall take such steps as may be necessary to give effect to the provisions of Article 31, paragraph 4, of the Statute.

3. The President of the Court shall convene the Chamber at the earliest date compatible with the requirements of the procedure.

Art. 92

1. Written proceedings in a case before a Chamber shall consist of a single pleading by each side. In proceedings begun by means of an application, the pleadings shall be delivered within successive time-limits. In proceedings begun by the notification of a special agreement, the pleadings shall be delivered within the same time-limits, unless the parties have agreed on successive delivery of their pleadings. The time-limits referred to in this paragraph shall be fixed by the Court, or by the President if the Court is not sitting, in consultation with the Chamber concerned if it is already constituted.

2. The Chamber may authorize or direct that further pleadings be filed if the parties are so agreed, or if the Chamber decides, proprio motu or at the request of one of the parties, that such pleadings are necessary.

3. Oral proceedings shall take place unless the parties agree to dispense with them, and the Chamber consents. Even when no oral proceedings take place, the Chamber may call upon the parties to supply information or furnish explanations orally.

Art. 93

Judgments given by a Chamber shall be read at a public sitting of that Chamber.

SECTION F. JUDGMENTS, INTERPRETATION AND REVISION

2. Any judge may, if he so desires, attach his individual opinion to the judgment, whether he dissents from the majority or not, a judge who wishes to record his concurrence or dissent without stating his reasons may do so in the form of a declaration. The same shall also apply to orders made by the Court.

3. One copy of the judgment duly signed and sealed shall be placed in the archives of the Court and another shall be transmitted to each of the parties. Copies shall be sent by the Registrar to: (a) the Secretary-General of the United Nations; (b) the Members of the United Nations; (c) other States entitled to appear before the Court.

When by reason of an agreement reached between the parties, the written and oral proceedings have been conducted in one of the Court's two official languages, and pursuant to Article 39, paragraph 1, of the Statute the judgment is to be delivered in that language, the text of the judgment in that language shall be the authoritative text.

Art. 97

If the Court, under Article 64 of the Statute, decides that all or part of a party's costs shall be paid by the other party, it may make an order for the purpose of giving effect to that decision.

SUBSECTION 2. REQUESTS FOR THE INTERPRETATION OR REVISION OF A JUDGMENT

Art. 98

1. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of a judgment any party may make a request for its interpretation, whether the original proceedings were begun by an application or by the notification of a special agreement.

2. A request for the interpretation of a judgment may be made either by an application or by the notification of a special agreement to that effect between the parties, the precise point or points in dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment shall be indicated.

3. If the request for interpretation is made by an application, the requesting party's contentions shall be set out therein, and the other party shall be entitled to file written observations thereon within a time-limit fixed by the Court, or by the President if the Court is not sitting.

4. Whether the request is made by an application or by notification of a special agreement, the Court may, if necessary, afford the parties the opportunity of furnishing further written or oral explanations.

Art. 99

1. A request for the revision of a judgment shall be made by an application containing the particulars necessary to show that the conditions specified in Article 61 of the Statute are fulfilled. Any documents in support of the application shall be annexed to it.

2. The other party shall be entitled to file written observations on the admissibility of the application within a time-limit fixed by the Court, or by the President if the Court is not sitting. These observations shall be communicated to the party making the application.

3. The Court, before giving its judgment on the admissibility of the application may afford the parties a further opportunity of presenting their views thereon.

4. If the Court finds that the application is admissible it shall fix time-limits for such further proceedings on the merits of the application as, after ascertaining the views of the parties, it considers necessary.

5. If the Court decides to make the admission of the proceedings in revision conditional on previous compliance with the judgment, it shall make an order accordingly.

Art. 100

1. If the judgment to be revised or to be interpreted was given by the Court, the request for its revision or interpretation shall be dealt with by the Court. If the judgment was given by a Chamber, the request for its revision or interpretation shall be dealt with by that Chamber.

2. The decision of the Court, or of the Chamber, on a request for interpretation or revision of a judgment shall itself be given in the form of a judgment.

SECTION G. MODIFICATIONS PROPOSED BY THE PARTIES

Art. 101

The parties to a case may jointly propose particular modifications or additions to the rules contained in the present Part (with the exception of Articles 93 to 97 inclusive), which may be applied by the Court or by a Chamber if the Court or the Chamber considers them appropriate in the circumstances of the case.

PART IV. ADVISORY PROCEEDINGS

Art. 102

1. In the exercise of its advisory functions under Article 65 of the Statute, the Court shall apply, in addition to the provisions of Article 96 of the Charter and Chapter IV of the Statute, the provisions of the present Part of the Rules.

2. The Court shall also be guided by the provisions of the Statute and of these Rules which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable. For this purpose, it shall above all consider whether the request for the advisory opinion relates to a legal question actually pending between two or more States.

3. When an advisory opinion is requested upon a legal question actually pending between two or more States, Article 31 of the Statute shall apply, as also the provisions of these Rules concerning the application of that Article.

When the body authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to request an advisory opinion informs the Court that its request necessitates an urgent answer, or the Court finds that an early answer would be desirable, the Court shall take all necessary steps to accelerate the procedure, and it shall convene as early as possible for the purpose of proceeding to a hearing and deliberation on the request.

Art. 104

All requests for advisory opinions shall be transmitted to the Court by the Secretary-General of the United Nations or, as the case may be, the chief administrative officer of the body authorized to make the request. The documents referred to in Article 65, paragraph 2, of the Statute shall be transmitted to the Court at the same time as the request or as soon as possible thereafter, in the number of copies required by the Registry.

Art. 105

1. Written statements submitted to the Court shall be communicated by the Registrar to any States and organizations which have submitted such statements.

2. The Court, or the President if the Court is not sitting, shall:

(a) determine the form in which, and the extent to which, comments permitted under Article 66, paragraph 4, of the Statute shall be received, and fix the time-limit for the submission of any such comments in writing;

(b) decide whether oral proceedings shall take place at which statements and comments may be submitted to the Court under the provisions of Article 66 of the Statute, and fix the date for the opening of such oral proceedings.

Art. 106

The Court, or the President if the Court is not sitting, may decide that the written statements and annexed documents shall be made accessible to the public on or after the opening of the oral proceedings. If the request for advisory opinion relates to a legal question actually pending between two or more States, the views of those States shall first be ascertained.

Art. 107

1. When the Court has completed its deliberations and adopted its advisory opinion, the opinion shall be read at a public sitting of the Court.
2. The advisory opinion shall contain:
 - the date on which it is delivered;
 - the names of the judges participating;
 - a summary of the proceedings;
 - a statement of the facts;
 - the reasons in point of law;
 - the reply to the question put to the Court;
 - the number and names of the judges constituting the majority;
 - a statement as to the text of the opinion which is authoritative.
3. Any judge may, if he so desires, attach his individual opinion to the advisory opinion of the Court, whether he dissents from the majority or not; a judge who wishes to record his concurrence of dissent without stating his reasons may do so in the form of a declaration.

Art. 108

The Registrar shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations, and, where appropriate, the chief administrative officer of the body which requested the advisory opinion, as to the date and the hour fixed for the public sitting to be held for the reading of the opinion. He shall also inform the representatives of the Members of the United Nations and other States, specialized agencies and public international organizations immediately concerned.

Art. 109

One copy of the advisory opinion, duly signed and sealed, shall be placed in the archives of the Court, another shall be sent to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and, where appropriate, a third to the chief administrative officer of the body which requested the opinion of the Court.
