mass violations of human rights and exceptionally serious war crimes, it had done so on the understanding that in formulating those articles the Drafting Committee would bear in mind, and at its discretion deal with, all or part of the elements of the crimes which had not been referred to the Committee. Those crimes were: intervention; colonial domination and other forms of alien domination; apartheid; recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries; and international terrorism. As a result, some of the texts proposed by the Drafting Committee were substantially different from those adopted on first reading.

6. As to structure, the set of articles was divided into two parts. Part one (General provisions) comprised three sections: section 1 dealt with general principles; section 2 dealt with the articles on individual criminal responsibility; and section 3 dealt with procedural issues and jurisdiction. Part two (Crimes against the peace and security of mankind) then defined and listed crimes against the peace and security of mankind. In order to facilitate cross-referencing, the numbers in square brackets indicated the number of the corresponding articles adopted on first reading.

7. The titles and texts of draft articles 1 to 18 as adopted by the Drafting Committee on second reading, read:

Article 3 [5]. Responsibility of States

The fact that the present Code provides for the responsibility of individuals for crimes against the peace and security of mankind is without prejudice to any question of the responsibility of States under international law.

Article 4 [11]. Order of a Government or a superior

The fact that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind acted pursuant to an order of a Government or a superior does not relieve him of criminal responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if justice so requires.

Article 5 [12]. Responsibility of the superior

The fact that a crime against the peace and security of mankind was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superiors of criminal responsibility, if they knew or had reason to know, in the circumstances at the time, that the subordinate was committing or was going to commit such a crime and if they did not take all necessary measures within their power to prevent or repress the crime.

Article 6 [13]. Official position and responsibility

Jurisdiction over the crime set out in article 15 shall rest with an international criminal court.

Article 8 [6]. Obligation to extradite or prosecute

The State Party in the territory of which an individual alleged to have committed a crime set out in article 16, 17 or 18 is found shall extradite or prosecute that individual.

Article 9. Extradition of alleged offenders

1. To the extent that the crimes set out in articles 16, 17 and 18 are not extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties, they shall be deemed to be included as such therein. States Parties undertake to include those crimes as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.
2. If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it may at its option consider the present Code as the legal basis for extradition in respect of those crimes. Extradition shall be subject to the conditions provided in the law of the requested State.
3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize those crimes as extraditable offences between themselves subject to the conditions provided in the law of the requested State.

4. Each of those crimes shall be treated, for the purpose of extradition between States Parties, as if it had been committed not only in the place in which it occurred but also in the territory of any other State Party.

PART ONE (General provisions)

ARTICLE 1 (Scope and application of the present Code)

8. Mr. CALERO RODRIGUES (Chairman of the Drafting Committee) said the article had been adopted by the Drafting Committee on second reading at the forty-seventh session and the current Drafting Committee had made no changes to it. The Chairman of the Drafting Committee at that session had explained that article 1 had incorporated articles 1 and 2 as adopted on first reading.⁴ The article constituted section 1 of part one and the Drafting Committee proposed that the Commission should adopt it.

9. Mr. PELLET said that he deplored the fact that the text still contained no definition of crimes against the peace and security of mankind.

10. Mr. PAMBOU-TCHIVOUNDA endorsed Mr. Pellet's comment. At the previous session, he had expressed his hope that a definition could be found for the concept of a crime against the peace and security of mankind.

11. Mr. THIAM (Special Rapporteur) said that, at the outset of its work, the Drafting Committee had discussed at length the possibility and desirability of providing a conceptual definition. The criterion finally adopted had been that of "extreme gravity"—what Mr. Pellet was wont to refer to as a "crime of crimes". Mr. Pambou-Tchivounda had indeed laid great stress on the need for a definition, had promised to submit a proposal, and had even suggested visiting him in Dakar to discuss the problem. So far, however, no proposal had been forthcoming. He would welcome any suggestions for an acceptable definition founded on a general criterion. However, in the absence of any specific proposal, there was no alternative but to retain article 1 in its present form.

12. Mr. CRAWFORD said he actively welcomed the absence of any definition other than that given in the current article 1, since he believed that no further definition was possible.

13. Mr. VILLAGRÁN KRAMER said that in criminal law as it operated in Latin America, the crime was always definable, since the judge did not necessarily
