Summary record of the 1122nd meeting

Topic:
Representation of States in their relations with international organizations article should provide for cases in which the organization, the organ or the conference invited States to send observer delegations.

79. Provision should also be made for the possibility of States members of an organization being able to participate as observers in the work of any of its organs whatsoever, which likewise did not always depend on the rules of procedure of the organization or organ.

80. Article 118 should therefore consist of several paragraphs covering the various possible situations.

81. Mr. CASTRÉN said he approved of article 118 in substance, but the drafting was unsatisfactory in several respects. He proposed that paragraph 1 be amended to read:

“A State not a member of the Organization may send an observer delegation, in accordance with the rules of procedure, to the meetings of one or more organs of the Organization.”

82. In paragraph 2, the word “observer” should be inserted before the word “delegation”. Furthermore, since the sending of an observer delegation was a form of participation, the paragraph should be amended to read:

“The participation of a State in a conference as an observer depends on the rules of procedure of that conference.”

83. As Mr. Ushakov had suggested, provision should also be made for the possibility of an invitation from the organization or conference.

84. Mr. KEARNEY said he wished to protest strongly against the misuse of the terms “delegation” and “representative” throughout the articles in Part V. A “delegate” was a full participant in a meeting or conference and a “delegation” consisted of a number of delegates. There was therefore no justification for using the expression “observer delegation”. An observer could in no instance be regarded as a full participant. The expression “observer delegation” should be replaced throughout by the word “observer”.

85. Similarly, it was a misnomer to speak of an “observer representative”; the appropriate term to use was again “observer”.

86. In article 118, paragraph 1 should specify the right of a State which was not a member of an organ to “send an observer” thereto and paragraph 2 should similarly empower a State not participating in a conference to “send an observer” thereto.

87. Mr. ROSENNE said that the Drafting Committee should consider carefully whether it was appropriate to use the expression “not participating in a conference”, because of the meaning given to the term “participating” in the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and in paragraph (4) of the commentary to article 78 of the present draft articles.¹³

The meeting rose at 1 p.m.

1122nd MEETING

Monday, 21 June 1971, at 3.5. p.m.

Chairman: Mr. Senjin TSURUOKA

Present: Mr. Ago, Mr. Albónico, Mr. Bartoš, Mr. Castrén, Mr. Eustathiades, Mr. Nagendra Singh, Mr. Reuter, Mr. Rosenne, Mr. Sette Câmara, Mr. Tamames, Mr. Ushakov, Mr. Ustor, Sir Humphrey Waldock, Mr. Yasseen.

Relations between States and international organizations

(A/CN.4/221 and Add.1; A/CN.4/238 and Add.1 and 2; A/CN.4/239 and Add.1 and 2; A/CN.4/240 and Add.1 to 7; A/CN.4/241 and Add.1 to 6; A/CN.4/L.162/Rev.1; A/CN.4/L.168/Add.4 and 5; A/CN.4/L.173)

[Item 1 of the agenda]

1. The CHAIRMAN invited the Commission to continue consideration of article 118, as proposed by the Special Rapporteur (A/CN.4/L.173).
2. Mr. SETTE CÂMARA said that Part V of the draft, which dealt with observer delegations of States to organs and to conferences, was necessary to complete the Commission's work on item 1 of its agenda. The subject was related to the everyday practice of States, which frequently sent such observers.
3. It would be going too far, however, to place those observers on a par with delegations which actually participated in the work of an organ or conference. The Special Rapporteur had perhaps been led in that direction by considerations of symmetry. Practice, however, did not show that States were eager to send observer delegations with all the attributes of normal delegations or of permanent observer missions. To use the terminology of article 120, a temporary observer delegation of such a size would be neither reasonable nor normal.
4. The draft articles on observer delegations should therefore be simplified and reduced to the lower level of individual observers, which would be more in conformity with State practice. If the Commission were to take a decision on those lines, it would be easy for the Drafting Committee to purge the articles of their inflationary excesses.
5. The wording of article 118 needed some correction. For example, in paragraph 2, the words “a delegation” should be replaced by the words “an observer delegation” so as to be in line with paragraph 1.
6. Paragraph 2 referred to the sending of such a delegation by a State “not participating in a conference”.

In fact, situations could arise in which a State was a member of an organ or a participant in a conference, but did not actually take part in its deliberations. Such cases had occurred in the Security Council and there was also the case of France, which was a non-participating member of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament. Obviously in such cases the State concerned had the right to send a delegation, and not merely an observer delegation, whenever it so wished. The Drafting Committee should endeavour to adjust the language of paragraph 2 to cover those cases.

7. Mr. USTOR said there was no need for a long series of articles on observer delegations; the concern expressed by Mr. Kearney on that point was shared by all members.

8. Nevertheless, the set of draft articles prepared by the Special Rapporteur for Part V provided a useful basis for discussion, which would enable the Commission to ascertain the similarities as well as the differences between regular delegations and observer delegations. When that process had been completed, it might be possible to merge the provisions on the two types of delegation, thereby shortening the draft.

9. The main difference between the two types of delegation related to their functions, but he noted that Part IV, on delegations of States to organs and to conferences, did not contain an article on functions. The Special Rapporteur had perhaps believed that such an article was unnecessary because of the provisions of sub-paragraphs (c) and (d) of article 78, on use of terms, which defined delegations, and thus brought out the difference between them and the observer delegations defined in sub-paragraphs (c) and (d) of article 117.

10. The Commission would consider at a later stage whether there were also differences between the two types of delegation with respect to their legal position and their privileges and immunities. At first sight it would seem that the privileges and immunities would have to be very much the same, since both types of delegation represented States.

11. It had been pointed out during the discussion that an observer delegation very often consisted of only one observer. In fact, the delegation of a member State could also consist of a single representative. On the other hand, there had been cases of observer delegations with a membership of nearly 100: for example, at the Geneva Conference of Foreign Ministers in 1959.

12. Mr. KEARNEY said that his basic objection to the concept of "observer delegations" was not connected with their size, but with the fact that an observer was not a delegate in the normal sense of the term. A delegate was a person who attended a conference or a meeting of an organ as the representative of a State and fully participated as such in the conference or meeting. If the draft articles were to refer to "observer delegations", they would cause confusion by suggesting that an observer was similar to a delegate, which was not the case.

13. Mr. USTOR said that the question was essentially one of terminology. It would be necessary to find an expression to designate the representative of a State who did not fully participate in a conference or meeting, but who acted as an observer.

14. Mr. ROSENNE said that in article 78, sub-paragraph (d), a "delegation to a conference" was stated to mean "the delegation sent by a participating State to represent it at the conference", and in paragraph (4) of the commentary to that article,¹ it was explained that the word "participating" was used in that provision "in the same general sense as that word is used in article 9 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties".²

15. It was worth recalling that, in connexion with that article of the Vienna Convention, there had been a discussion on the problem of a delegation which did not take part in the work of a conference, but which at the very end merely voted for the adoption of the instrument formulated by the conference; the conclusion had been reached that such a delegation would be the delegation of a "participating State". In view of those considerations, the Drafting Commission should examine carefully the use, in article 78 and articles 117 and 118, of the expressions "participating State" and "State not participating in a conference", in order to ensure that there was no conflict with the provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.

16. Mr. YASSEEN said he had never been in favour of the Commission drafting articles on observer delegations to organs and conferences. But since it had started on that course, it must now examine the subject in all its aspects.

17. The very concept of an "observer" was extremely complex. An observer could be sent by a State which was a member of an organization but was not represented in one of its organs, or by a State which was not a member of the organization. In the case of conferences, an observer could be sent by a State entitled to participate in the conference, or by a State which was not entitled to participate.

18. The task of the Commission, which was considering Part V of the Draft at first reading only, was therefore extremely complicated. It would have been sufficient to state the two rules governing the whole subject, which were set out in article 118, but it had been decided to draft a series of separate articles and the Drafting Committee would have to consider the substance as well as the form of the new provisions. First, however, the question should be considered by the Working Group.

19. Mr. KEARNEY said he agreed that it would be dangerous for the Commission to undertake the drafting of provisions concerning observers; references to that subject should be kept to a minimum.

² United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, Official Records, Documents of the Conference, p. 290 (United Nations publication, Sales No. E.70.V.5).

20. He appreciated the desire to deal with the subject in the interests of completeness and of the balance of the draft, but it should be appreciated that the Commission did not have before it the necessary material to determine the proper course of action. He had consulted a number of books on conferences and on diplomacy and had been unable to find any reference to research on the subject of observers. The Commission was taking up the subject without any observations by the Special Rapporteur to provide guidance on principle or on practice. It was embarking on a course which would lead it to propose draft articles destined to form part of an international treaty, without first having submitted them to governments for their comments.

21. Mr. EUSTATHIADES said he noted that the provisions proposed by the Special Rapporteur, in particular articles 118 and 121, used the term "observer delegation" and clearly implied that a delegation consisted of a number of persons. The term "observer delegation" had come into use with the establishment of international organizations. Previously, it had been customary to speak of one or more observers. As a single observer might be sent to an organ or to a conference, that possibility should be clearly indicated in the articles under consideration. He therefore suggested that the term "observer delegation" be replaced by the term "observer or observer delegation", both in the titles and in the texts of the articles.

22. Mr. USHAKOV said that the Commission could not ignore the question of observer delegations to organs and conferences, because such delegations did exist. It was clear from the discussion that the Commission was aware of the need to deal with the subject; it only remained to be seen what decision it would ultimately take. It might add to the draft articles a Part V which it had considered at first reading; or after discussing the question it might be unable to reach agreement on a text and have to postpone that part of its work.

23. Mr. YASSEEN explained that the purpose of his previous remarks had been to stress the difficulty of the tasks confronting the Working Group and the Drafting Committee. Since the Commission had decided to study the question, it was important that its work should be complete.

24. Mr. NAGENDRA SINGH said he agreed with those members who thought that the problem of observer delegations should be covered by the draft articles for the sake of completeness, but he also agreed with Mr. Yasseen that the Commission should consider the matter thoroughly.

25. On the question of the number of persons serving on an observer delegation, he suggested that, in article 117, on the use of terms, the provisions of sub-paragraphs (c) and (d) should be so framed as to make it clear that an observer delegation could consist of one or more persons. It was, of course, very common for an observer delegation to consist of a single observer.

26. Mr. REUTER said he fully supported Mr. Yasseen. He was worried that the Commission was now moving into an area with which he himself was quite unfamiliar.

Even if his colleagues were better informed, there was no denying that the practice regarding observer delegations was very little known.

27. It was surprising that none of the articles proposed by the Special Rapporteur dealt with the functions of an observer delegation. It was not enough to say, as was implied in sub-paragraphs (c) and (d) of articles 117, that the function of an observer delegation was to represent the sending State. Every State official exercised a function of representation, but it was always combined with some other function. In the present case it was combined with the function of observing.

28. As Mr. Yasseen had pointed out, there were many ways of observing; and the best observers were not, perhaps, always to be found in observer delegations. The function of a delegation to an organ such as the Security Council was not so much to observe as to take part in discussions of direct concern to the sending State. The function of representation prevailed over the function of observation. The first essential, therefore, was to set out the various functions which an observer delegation could perform.

29. Mr. AGO said that the Commission had already had to make several choices. It had decided, first, to deal not only with the permanent missions and delegations of States members of an organization, but also with those of non-member States. When it had drafted the articles on permanent observer missions, it had gone so far as to say that a member of a permanent observer mission could represent his State in an organ of an organization or at a conference. It was that provision which had induced it later to draft separate articles on observer delegations.

30. The articles proposed by the Special Rapporteur seemed to be modelled too closely on those of the other parts of the draft. They did not reflect the essential difference between a member State and a non-member State, with respect to representation in an organ or participation in a conference. To devote a separate article to the size of an observer delegation was to take little account of reality, since a single observer might well be sent to an organ or to a conference.

31. As certain questions of substance would have to be settled before the whole matter was referred to the Drafting Committee, the articles proposed by the Special Rapporteur should first be examined by the Working Group under the chairmanship of Mr. Kearney.

32. Mr. ROSENNE said he noted that there was no proposal to reject the set of articles prepared by the Special Rapporteur on observer delegations (A./CN.4/L.173), but merely a proposal to refer them either to the Drafting Committee or to the small Working Group.

33. That being so, he wished to draw attention to an example taken from his own experience as representative of his country. In that capacity, he had sat in the Security Council, although his country was not a member of the Council. He had thus participated in the discussion of a question brought before the Security Council in which the interests of his country were specially affected. He had spoken and taken part in the discussions as of right, and he had been consulted by the President of the Security Council in the course of consultations carried out by the President.

34. When the Commission had adopted article 78, on the use of terms, in Part IV of the draft, he had been under the impression that the type of representation he had described was covered by the provisions of that article. But a comparison of the definition of a "delegation to an organ" in sub-paragraph (c) of article 78 with sub-paragraph (c) of article 117 on the meaning of the term "observer delegation to an organ", showed that the example he had given appeared to fall outside the scope of both provisions.

35. The Drafting Committee would therefore have to consider carefully the wording of sub-paragraph (c) of article 78 and sub-paragraph (c) of article 117, because those two provisions, if taken together, were certainly not correct.

36. Sir Humphrey WALDOCK said that the draft articles on observers, which the Special Rapporteur had prepared in response to the Commission's request, were based largely on analogy. In the short time available, they had necessarily been formulated by an intellectual process rather than as a result of a thorough examination of the practice in the matter, which was not easy to ascertain quickly.

37. The Commission should at any rate make an attempt to deal with the subject of observers and he would be prepared to agree to the suggestion that the whole subject be referred to the small Working Group, which would examine whether some modified form of the Special Rapporteur's articles 117 to 127 could be included in the Commission's draft, either as an integral part of the draft or as an annex.

38. The Secretariat could perhaps assist the Working Group by providing it with some information on the subject of observers sent to organizations having their headquarters at Geneva. He was not suggesting that any major study be undertaken, but simply that such information as could be readily obtained should be given orally to the Group.

39. Mr. MOVCHAN (Secretary to the Commission) said it would be possible for the Secretariat to give the Working Group, even as soon as its next meeting, some information that was available at Geneva. For example, it could supply information on participation by observers for States that were not Members of the United Nations, but were parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, in the work of the General Assembly on amendments to the Statute of the Court.

40. Mr. BARTOŠ said it was important to note the distinction between passive and active observer delegations. That distinction was not always made in practice, but it should be taken into account by the Drafting Committee. It would even be advisable to devote a separate paragraph in each article to each of those categories.

41. An observer delegation was passive so long as it confined itself to observing. It became active when its function also included taking action to protect the interests of the sending State. When the observer delegation of a State not a member of an organization objected to specific acts by member States, it was representing the sending State and playing a really active role. In such cases the head of the observer delegation abandoned his role of vigilant observer to request permission to speak and to intervene actively in the proceedings, as sometimes happened in the Security Council.

42. Active and passive observer delegations should therefore be dealt with separately in the articles of Part V of the draft.

43. Mr. KEARNEY said the discussion had shown that the subject of observers involved many difficult problems on which there was not much information available. To give one example, article 118, paragraph 2, provided that a State not participating in a conference might send a "delegation" thereto "in accordance with the rules of procedure of that conference". In fact, the rules of procedure of a conference were always adopted after the conference had begun, so that the State sending the observer would not know whether he would be admitted or not. The question was a difficult one and he would not venture to give a definite answer to it at that stage.

44. Mr. USTOR said there was general agreement that the Commission should endeavour to draft a complete set of articles; it should therefore do its best not to omit the subject of observer delegations.

45. The discussion had shown that there were many different kinds of delegations. To illustrate their diversity, he would give an example from a non-universal organization, the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA). Yugoslavia, was not a member of the Council, but had entered into a special agreement with it, in virtue of which it participated in the Council's work with a wide range of rights. The delegations of Yugoslavia to certain bodies of the CMEA were more than observers, but less than full fledged delegations of member States.

46. The Commission had now before it the texts of articles 81 to 86, on delegations, as proposed by the Drafting Committee (A/CN.4/L.168/Add.5). Sub-paragraphs (c) and (d) of article 78, on the use of terms, stated the meaning of the terms "delegation to an organ" and "delegation to a conference", without specifying whether those delegations came from member States or from non-member States. The Drafting Committee should consider whether those provisions should take that aspect of the matter into account and whether a separate provision on the functions of delegations should be included in the draft articles.

47. Mr. BARTOŠ said that Mr. Ustor's remarks about Yugoslavia's participation in the CMEA also applied to its participation in a European organization of an entirely different political complexion. To the CMEA, Yugoslavia had sent an observer delegation, appointed as such in accordance with the rules of procedure of that organization. On certain questions, Yugoslavia had undertaken to co-operate and participate in decisions; on others, its delegation had to confine itself to observing and to expressing the opinion of its Government.

48. The position of Yugoslavia was rather different in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. There, its delegation played an active role in organs and conferences in which matters of direct concern to it were discussed. If it had no direct interest in the questions to be discussed, it was not invited and performed only observer functions.

49. Many other countries were in a similar situation. In addition, some so-called "protecting" States participated in conferences as observers to assist the States taking part. At some regional conferences, there were a number of different statuses for different participating States, some of them allowing the exercise of observer functions pure and simple, and some active participation which might be partial or total.

50. After the First World War, the allies had invited certain States to take part in the drafting of the peace treaties, believing that they had only a limited interest in the proceedings. A distinction had been made between States entitled to be consulted and States entitled to ask to be consulted; thus their observer delegations had not been of the same character. After the Second World War, at the Paris Conference, a similar distinction had been made, together with an additional distinction relating to the oral or written character of the consultations.

51. The sending States had always claimed that their delegations had an active role to play in those conferences. The so-called principal Allied Powers, on the other hand, had maintained that, in view of the so-called "legitimate" interests of the great Powers, the sending States could play only an observer role.

52. The question was thus exceedingly complex; it was important to simplify it as much as possible and not to disregard the two modes of expression he had mentioned.

53. The CHAIRMAN, speaking as a member of the Commission, said he must admit that in spite of his long diplomatic experience, he had little knowledge of the subject under discussion.

54. When the Commission had drafted the Convention on the Law of Treaties, it had excluded unwritten agreements and no one criticized it on that account. It could do the same in the present case. He did not wish to exaggerate the difficulties, but it must be admitted that it would be risky to draft provisions on a little known subject. It was true that the Commission was required to work on the codification and progressive development of international law, but it must not ignore custom and practice either.

55. As matters stood, it should not be too ambitious, but should make a last effort to draw up some simple, easily applicable articles.

56. Sir Humphrey WALDOCK said that all the remarks made about difficulties of the present subject were really connected with the meaning to be attached to the term "observer". The discussion had shown that there were different types of participant and various degrees of participation in a conference. An attempt should be made to define the term "observer".

57. The CHAIRMAN said that the Commission might perhaps wish to refer the whole of Part V to the Working Group for review in the light of the discussion.

58. Mr. ROSENNE said he had no objection to that course; the Working Group might examine whether a new proposal could be submitted to the Commission. First of all, however, it might be desirable for the Commission to examine briefly articles 119 to 127.

59. Mr. USHAKOV said he thought such an examination would be a waste of time.

60. Mr. SETTE CÂMARA said that the debate on article 118 had shown that the Special Rapporteur's draft articles did not provide an adequate basis for a discussion of the subject of observers. He therefore favoured the idea of referring the document immediately to the Working Group without examining articles 119 to 127.

61. Mr. ALBÓNICO suggested that the Special Rapporteur should be informed of the present discussion and invited to reply to the comments of members.

62. Mr. ROSENNE said that he had not raised any formal objection to the whole series of articles being referred to the Working Group.

63. Mr. CASTRÉN said he was in favour of referring the Special Rapporteur's working paper to the Working Group without further discussion.

64. The CHAIRMAN said that if there were no objections he would take it that the Commission agreed to refer the Special Rapporteur's working paper (A/CN.4/L.173) to the Working Group, together with the comments made at the present meeting and the previous meeting.

It was so agreed.³

QUESTION OF CONFERENCES NOT CONVENED BY INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

65. Mr. TAMMES said that he would like to repeat a proposal he had made at an earlier meeting, namely, that the Special Rapporteur be asked to submit an article covering conferences not convened by international organizations.⁴

66. Mr. EUSTATHIADES said that a distinction could be made between, on the one hand, conferences meeting under the auspices of international organizations of a universal character or under the auspices of other international organizations, and on the other hand, conferences not convened by international organizations, that was to say primarily political conferences. That was a question, the Working Group might be asked to clarify.

67. Mr. USHAKOV observed that the last sentence of article 2, paragraph 2, made the draft articles applicable to the representatives of States to international organizations not of a universal character if the States members of such organizations so agreed, so that it would be sufficient to draft a similar provision applicable to delegations to conferences not meeting under the auspices of an international organization of a universal character. That being so, it would be better to wait until the Commission came to consider the general provisions before deciding to draft new articles.

³ For resumption of the discussion see 1139th meeting.

⁴ See 1105th meeting, paras. 19-23.

68. Mr. ROSENNE said that he too thought the answer to the question would be found in a revised version of article 2, which would be made applicable to the whole draft.

69. Mr. EUSTATHIADES said that the question raised by Mr. Tammes ought not to be ignored. In order to avoid analogies, it ought to be made clear why a distinction should be made between conferences meeting under the auspices of an international organization of a universal character and conferences not connected with any international organization, which might be regional or universal, but would be primarily political in character. However, the scope of the Commission's terms of reference should be carefully considered.

70. Mr. TAMMES said he was not pressing the Commission to ask the Special Rapporteur to prepare articles on the question he had mentioned.

71. Mr. USHAKOV said that in that case perhaps the Working Group might be asked to deal with it.

72. The CHAIRMAN said that if there were no objections he would take it that the Commission agreed to ask the Working Group to study the question of delegations to conferences not meeting under the auspices of an international organization of a universal character.

It was so agreed.⁵

DRAFT ARTICLES PROPOSED BY THE DRAFTING COMMITTEE
(resumed from the previous meeting)

73. The CHAIRMAN invited the Commission to consider articles 65 to 77 as proposed by the Drafting Committee (A/CN.4/L.168/Add.4).

ARTICLE 65

74. Mr. AGO (Chairman of the Drafting Committee) said that the Drafting Committee had considered it advisable to retain the intentional difference in wording between article 65 and the corresponding article in Part II, namely, article 22. In the latter article, the words "all facilities" were used, whereas article 65 spoke of "the facilities required".

75. The text proposed by the Drafting Committee for article 65, which was unchanged, read:

Article 65
General facilities

The host State shall accord to the permanent observer mission the facilities required for the performance of its functions.

⁵ For resumption of the discussion see 1132nd meeting, para. 9.

The Organization shall assist the permanent observer mission in obtaining those facilities and shall accord to the mission such facilities as lie within its own competence.

76. Mr. YASSEEN said he approved of the wording proposed.

77. Mr. USTOR said that the article as a whole was quite acceptable to him, though he wondered whether the different nuances in the wording of articles 22 and 65 were really necessary.

78. Mr. AGO (Chairman of the Drafting Committee) said that the Drafting Committee would try to meet Mr. Ustor's point at a later stage.

79. The CHAIRMAN said that if there were no objections he would take it that the Commission provisionally approved article 65, on the understanding that it would be re-examined in conjunction with article 22.

It was so agreed.⁶

ARTICLES 66 and 66 bis

80. Mr. AGO (Chairman of the Drafting Committee) said that article 66, as adopted by the Commission in 1970, had dealt with two different questions,⁷ and the Committee had considered it advisable to split it into two separate articles, numbered provisionally 66 and 66 bis, modelled on articles 23 and 24 respectively.

81. The texts proposed for articles 66 and 66 bis read:

Article 66

Premises and accommodation

1. The host State shall either facilitate the acquisition on its territory, in accordance with its laws, by the sending State of premises necessary for the latter's permanent observer mission or assist the sending State in obtaining accommodation in some other way.

2. The host State and the Organization shall also, where necessary, assist permanent observer missions in obtaining suitable accommodation for their members.

Article 66 bis

Assistance by the Organization in respect of privileges and immunities

The Organization shall, where necessary, assist the sending State, its permanent observer mission and the members of the permanent observer mission in securing the enjoyment of the privileges and immunities provided for by the present articles.

82. Mr. BARTOŠ said that article 66 bis was very useful, because practice had shown that an organization often had to intervene with its member States to secure the enjoyment of some of the recognized rights of permanent observer missions.

83. Mr. YASSEEN said there seemed to be a discrepancy in article 66, between the words dans le cadre de sa législation, in the French version, and the words "in accordance with its laws", in the English version.

⁶ For resumption of the discussion see 1132nd meeting, para. 127.

⁷ For previous text and discussion see 1104th meeting, para. 76 et seq.

84. Mr. TESLENKO (Deputy Secretary to the Commission) said that the wording in question was taken from article 21 of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations.⁸

85. The CHAIRMAN said that if there were no objections he would take it that the Commission provisionally approved articles 66 and 66 bis as proposed by the Drafting Committee.

*It was so agreed.*⁹

ARTICLES 67¹⁰ and 67 bis

86. Mr. AGO (Chairman of the Drafting Committee) said that the Committee had made no change in article 67. Article 67 bis made the provisions of article 27 *bis*¹¹ applicable to Part III of the draft. The wording of both articles would probably have to be changed when Parts II and III of the draft were combined.

87. The texts proposed for articles 67 and 67 bis read:

Article 67

Privileges and immunities of the permanent observer mission

The provisions of articles 25, 26, 27, 29 and 38, paragraph 1 (a), shall apply also in the case of permanent observer missions.

Article 67 bis

Entry into the territory of the host State

The provisions of article 27 bis shall apply also in the case of members of the permanent observer mission and members of their families forming part of their respective households.

88. The CHAIRMAN said that if there were no objections he would take it that the Commission provisionally approved articles 67 and 67 bis as proposed by the Drafting Committee, pending examination of the texts to be submitted to it after Parts II and III of the draft had been combined.

*It was so agreed.*¹²
