TEXT OF ARTICLE 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

1. The decisions treated in this study illustrate the practice of the Security Council in connexion with calls by members of the Council or of the United Nations for action to be taken under Article 39 or Chapter VII of the Charter.1

2. Although a few decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly contain explicit references to Article 39 or Chapter VII, none of these justify treatment under the Analytical Summary of Practice, as they did not involve constitutional discussion or even Charter-related arguments requiring detailed analysis.

3. The Summary of Practice recalls the large number of instances in which the Security Council or the General Assembly invoked the language of Article 39 or called for the application of measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. It also deals with the occasions when draft resolutions referring to Article 39 or Chapter VII failed of adoption or were not brought to a vote, and with the numerous invocations of Article 39 or Chapter VII in the debates of the Security Council and the General Assembly.

4. During the period under review occasional objections were raised that actions proposed under General Assembly resolutions were within the exclusive competence of the Security Council under Article 39; these are dealt with in the Summary of Practice. The study of Article 11 in this Supplement contains a detailed examination of the questions raised by this practice of the General Assembly.

5. During the period under review the Security Council did not take any decisions explicitly under Article 39, but it adopted a number of resolutions which invoked Chapter VII explicitly.

6. The Security Council also took several decisions containing implicit references to Article 39 or apparently referring to the language of the Article; none of the resolutions contained an implicit reference to Chapter VII.

7. In connexion with the situation in Southern Rhodesia, the Security Council reiterated its finding that the situation constituted a threat to international peace and security and invoked Chapter VII explicitly in affirming and expanding the sanctions imposed on Southern Rhodesia. A fourth resolution reaffirmed this determination without, however, invoking Chapter VII.

8. In its consideration of two complaints by Zambia the Council also reaffirmed that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security, and decided, in one of these resolutions, to consider further measures under Chapter VII against the racist régime if it continued to defy the sanctions imposed by the Council.

SUMMARY OF PRACTICE

6 C resolution 424 (1978), para. 5, for the warning to consider further Chapter VII measures against Southern Rhodesia.

8 S C resolution 411 (1977) of 30 June 1977, 7th preamb. para. in connexion with the complaint by Mozambique.
again recalled the determination under resolution 232 (1966) that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security.

10. In 1977, after a prolonged examination of the question of South Africa, the Security Council decided to transform the voluntary arms embargo under resolution 181 (1965) of 7 August 1965 into a mandatory arms embargo; this was accomplished by Security Council resolution 418 (1977) of 4 November 1977 through explicit invocation of Chapter VII of the Charter and the determination, "having regard to the policies and acts of the South African Government, that the acquisition by South Africa of arms and related material constitutes a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security", implicitly referring to Article 39 of the Charter. Although the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa represented the first instance of sanctions against a Member State of the United Nations, this grave decision did not give rise to a constitutional discussion about Chapter VII or about the role of Article 39.

11. In its resolution 421 (1977) of 9 December 1977 the Security Council recalled its determination under resolution 418 (1977) regarding South Africa and decided to establish a Committee to oversee the implementation of the mandatory arms embargo by the Member States of the United Nations.10

12. During the period under review there were additional instances where the Security Council included explicit references to Chapter VII in its resolutions: this was the case in resolution 288 (1970) regarding Southern Rhodesia,11 in resolution 314 (1972) in connexion with the same question,12 in resolution 428 (1978) in connexion with the complaint by Angola against South Africa,13 and in resolution 439 (1978) in connexion with the situation in Namibia.14 In the first two of these instances, the preambular invocation of Chapter VII read as follows: "Acting in accordance with previous decisions of the Security Council on Southern Rhodesia, taken under Chapter VII of the Charter.15 The last two resolutions contained a warning that if South Africa did not comply with the decision of the Council, the Council would have to consider measures in accordance with Chapter VII.

13. In connexion with other agenda items the Council adopted resolutions, some provisions of which might be considered to constitute implicit references to the language of Article 39. These instances are briefly listed as follows:

(i) S C resolution 282 (1970) of 23 July 1970, 7th preamb. para.: "Convinced further that the situation resulting from the continued application of the policies of apartheid and the constant build-up of the South African military and police forces . . . constitutes a potential threat to international peace and security."16

(ii) S C resolution 294 (1971) of 15 July 1971, 5th and 8th preamb. paras.: "Conscious of its duty to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to international peace and security and for the suppression of acts of aggression . . . . "

"Gravely concerned that incidents of this nature, by threatening the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Senegal, might endanger international peace and security."17

(iii) S C resolution 300 (1971) of 12 October 1971, 5th preamb. para.: "Conscious that it has the responsibility to take efficient collective measures to prevent and eliminate threats to peace and security."18

(iv) S C resolution 302 (1971) of 24 November 1971, 4th preamb. para.: "Deeply concerned at the climate of insecurity and instability, fraught with a threat to peace and security in the region."19

(v) S C resolution 307 (1971) of 21 December 1971, 1st preamb. para.: "Having discussed the grave situation in the sub-continent, which remains a threat to international peace and security."20

(vi) S C resolution 311 (1972) of 4 February 1972, 5th preamb. para.: "Gravely concerned that the situation in South Africa seriously disturbs international peace and security in southern Africa."21

(vii) S C resolution 312 (1972) of 4 February 1972, para. 3: "Again affirms that the situation resulting from the policies of Portugal both in its colonies and in its constant provocations against the neighbouring States seriously disturbs international peace and security in the African continent."22

(viii) S C resolution 353 (1974) of 20 July 1974, 5th preamb. para.: "Gravely concerned about the situation which has led to a serious threat to international peace and security."23

(ix) S C resolution 360 (1974) of 16 August 1974, 3rd preamb. para.: "Gravely concerned at the deterioration of the situation in Cyprus resulting from the further military operations, which constituted a most serious threat to peace and security in the Eastern Mediterranean area."24

(x) S C resolution 387 (1976) of 31 March 1976, 6th preamb. para.: "Gravely concerned at the acts of aggression committed by South Africa against the People's Republic

9See S C resolution 418 (1978), 10th preamb. para. for the explicit reference to Chapter VII and para. 1 for the determination, as stipulated under Article 39. There are numerous other phrases in that resolution that might be regarded as references to both Article 39 and Chapter VII, in particular the 2nd, 7th and 8th preamb. paras., as well as the operative part detailing the measures to be taken under Chapter VII.

10S C resolution 421 (1977), 1st preamb. para. and para. 1.

12S C resolution 314 (1972) of 28 February 1972, 5th preamb. para.

13S C resolution 315 (1972) of 18 March 1972, para. 8.

15The original draft resolution submitted by Burundi, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Syria and Zambia (S C (25), Suppl. for July-Sept. 1970, S/9882) at the 454th mtg. on 22 July 1970 read "a serious threat", clearly invoking the language of Article 39, but due to various statements expressing unwillingness to act under Chapter VII in this case, the draft was revised and the word "serious" was replaced by "potential". For relevant statements, see S C (25), 154th mtg.: Mauritius, paras. 19.
of Angola and the violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity.”

(xi) S C resolution 405 (1977) of 14 April 1977, para. 2:

“Strongly condemns the act of armed aggression perpetuated against the People’s Republic of Benin on 10 January 1977.”

None of these provisions led to a constitutional discussion regarding Article 39 or Chapter VII of the Charter. 14. The Security Council considered a large number of draft resolutions containing explicit and implicit references to Article 39 and Chapter VII, which, however, either were not voted upon or failed of adoption. The texts of these proposals are given as follows:

(i) S/9696, 2nd and 9th preamb. paras.:

“Reaffirming in particular its resolution 232 (1966), in which it determined that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constitutes a threat to international peace and security.”

(ii) S/9882, 7th preamb. para.:

“Convinced further that the situation resulting from the continued application of the policies of apartheid... constitutes a serious threat to international peace and security.”

(iii) S/9976, 4th preamb. para.:

(iv) S/10365, 3rd preamb. para.:

“Mindful that violations of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a State constitute a threat to international peace and security.”

(v) S/10416, 2nd preamb. para.:

“Convinced that hostilities along the Indo-Pakistan border constitute an immediate threat to international peace and security.”

inalienable rights," the situation in South Africa: killings and violence by the apartheid régime in South Africa in Soweto and other areas, the complaint by the Prime Minister of Mauritius, as Chairman of the Organization of African Unity, of an "act of aggression" by Israel against the Republic of Uganda, and the complaint by Zambia against South Africa. In 1977 Chapter VII was explicitly referred to in the Security Council during the consideration of the complaint of the Government of Botswana against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia concerning violations of its territorial sovereignty, the question of South Africa, the situation in Southern Rhodesia, the complaint by Mozambique, and the situation in Cyprus. In 1978 Chapter VII was invoked in connexion with the question of South Africa, the question of Southern Rhodesia, the complaint by Zambia, the situation in the Middle East, the complaint by Angola against South Africa, the situation in Namibia.

18. Although the determination under Article 39 and the adoption of measures under Chapter VII are exclusively the responsibility of the Security Council, the General Assembly has continued as in the past to adopt resolutions which employ language similar to that of Article 39 and contain calls for the imposition of sanctions under Chapter VII.

19. In one instance the General Assembly adopted, as resolution 3314 (XXIX), the Definition of Aggression which in its preambular part invoked Article 39 together with Articles 41 and 42. The relevant paragraph reads as follows:

"The General Assembly,

'Recalling' that the Security Council, in accordance with Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations, shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security . . .

The Assembly called the attention of the Security Council to this definition and recommended that the Council take it into account as guidance in determining the existence of an act of aggression. In general, the Definition of Aggression provided that the first use of armed force by a State in contravention of the Charter be considered prima facie evidence of an act of aggression. The discussions in the Sixth Committee of the Assembly during the years 1970-1974 reflected clearly the common conviction that the definition of an act of aggression was not meant to restrict, but to strengthen and widen the mandate of the Security Council under Article 39.

20. During the twenty-fifth through the thirty-third sessions, the General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions with what might be considered to be implicit references to Article 39:

22. Article 39 was frequently referred to in connexion with the search for a definition of aggression by the United Nations; there were numerous explicit and implicit references during the deliberations of the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly regarding this agenda item,

See in connexion with the agenda item: Report of the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression; G A (25), 6th Com., 1202nd-1209th and 1212th mtgs.; G A (26), 6th Com., 1207th-1272nd and 1276th mtgs.; G A (27), 6th Com., 1384th-1352nd mtgs.; G A (28), 6th Com., 1440th-1443rd mtgs.; and G A (29), 1472nd-147516, 1477th-1482nd mtgs. See also the reports of the Special Committee and of the Sixth Committee in connexion with this agenda item during the twenty-fifth to twenty-ninth sessions of the General Assembly.

23. Throughout the period under review Chapter VII was acted in the General Assembly and its Committees so often that it is impossible to include them in detail in this study. But it seems feasible and useful to indicate in connexion with which agenda items reference has been made to Chapter VII and its provision for the imposition of mandatory sanctions by the Security Council.

24. The largest number of explicit references to Chapter VII occurred in connexion with the discussion of southern African issues, namely, the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa, the question of Namibia, the question of the strengthening of the United Nations, the question of the position of Namibia, and the need to consider suggestions regarding the review of the Charter of the United Nations; the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations, the deepening and consolidation of international detente and prevention of the danger of nuclear war, the question of Palestine, the situation in the Middle East, Article 39 was also explicitly invoked during the tenth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament.

25. Chapter VII was frequently referred to and constituted a major focus for the committee deliberations.
regarding the agenda items concerning the report of the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression, the consideration of measures for the strengthening of international security, the comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects, and the need to consider suggestions regarding the review of the Charter of the United Nations.

26. During the general debate at the beginning of each regular session of the General Assembly there were quite frequently explicit references to Chapter VII in connexion with some major political controversy. Chapter VII was also frequently cited during the deliberations about the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations. Throughout the years under review Chapter VII was occasionally invoked in connexion with items relating to the Middle East and with the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

27. When the General Assembly discussed disarmament at the Tenth Special Session and when it reviewed the results of that special session at the following thirty-third session, some of the proceedings involved explicit references to Chapter VII.

28. There were also occasional but mostly incidental invocations of Chapter VII during the consideration of a number of other agenda items; none of these gave rise to a constitutional argument or discussion.

29. Throughout the period under review, occasional objectives were raised to a number of General Assembly resolutions and in the course of the consideration of draft measures. It was argued that the proposed actions under Chapter VII were within the exclusive competence of the Security Council and that the General Assembly was not authorized under the Charter to infringe upon the prerogatives of the Security Council. These arguments were put forth especially regarding calls by the Assembly for sanctions against South Africa and against Israel and in connexion with the definition of aggression. No serious effort to seek the deletion of such provisions resulted from those objections of principle.
